Chip on his shoulder

The Pocono Record carrier boy Larry Transue, 14, isn't kidding when he says he carries a "chip" on his shoulder. Actually, the "chip" is a pet squirrel named Hogan. Hogan, who eats crackers and peanuts while Larry delivers papers, lives in a birdcage at the Transue home on West Main St., Stroudsburg. (Staff photo by Rod MacLeod)

LONG POND — For Richard Petty, there were only three hours of supreme togetherness with that tickle lady called the Pennsylvania 500 pole.

It seemed as if the NASCAR speedster had won her attentions forever with his record qualifying speed of 147.292 miles per hour.

Then, just a half an hour before the first day of qualifications ended at the Pocono International Raceway, a Super Bird streaked around the two and a half mile oval, and veteran stock car driver Roger McCluskey took command of the impressive lady with a time of 148.177 miles per hour.

The 41-year-old Arizona speedster topped Butch Hartman's 1971 record of 146.123 by more than two miles an hour, and currently holds the lead for the pole position. The number one spot will not be decided until qualifications officially end at 3 p.m. today.

McCluskey, who is also entered in the Schaefer 500, took 20 practice laps around the field before he decided to qualify. Since he hadn't arrived until the morning practice session was over, his crew needed the afternoon for some all important suspension adjustments of his 1970 Plymouth.

"I wouldn't have waited to qualify even if Richard hadn't gone out today," he explained. "It is cool this evening. Tomorrow afternoon it might be hot."

He nodded in agreement when somebody suggested that an early qualification for the Pennsylvania 500 would give him more rest for the championship race Saturday.

Commenting on his current status as the number one car, McCluskey, who collected two stock titles in 1969 and 1970, said the pole position was not really important to him.

"I don't think it makes much difference for the race, but there is some prestige in sitting on the pole," he said.

Although stressing that speeds in Sunday's race will vary somewhat according to the fuel load, McCluskey conceded that his record breaking lap felt good.

"Records are made to be broken," he said immediately after his qualification. "If there was any reserve in the car, I don't know where it was at."

"The car generally has treated me well," said the 5-10 driver who began his career in 1947. "The car hasn't let me down too many times. I have a good crew and that's what you need."

Essentially McCluskey's car is the same car he has run since 1969. It was a Roadrunner, but in 1970 a Super Bird body was added and it now contains a new engine.

"On any big track the Super Bird is faster than an unwinged car like the Petty type," he said. "The Super Bird was made to race on a track like this."

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Nixon said Thursday that U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim had been duped by Communist propaganda into criticizing the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam without raising one word of protest against North Vietnam's invasion of the South.

Nixon's remarks, made at a non-televized news conference in his office, were the toughest administration criticism yet of the U.N. Secretary General. Nixon also criticized antiwar members of the Congress for failing to realize, he said, that a blood bath would ensue in South Vietnam if the United States simply pulled its troops out.

The President was angered by Waldheim's assertion that U.S. warplanes were damaging North Vietnam's dike system, either intentionally or by mistake.

The President said there might have been minor damage to insignificant portions of the 2,700-mile chain of dikes holding back the Red River, but there have been "no strikes on any major dike areas—the major dams—which are the heart of the system."

"If it were the policy of the United States to bomb dikes, we could take the significant part of them out within a week," Nixon declared.

The President directed some of his criticisms toward backers of end the war measures in Congress, saying their efforts were hurting peace negotiations at a time when "chances for a negotiated peace are better than ever before."

Nixon was visibly angry when asked about Waldheim's criticism and said he, like his predecessor, U Thant, took a one-sided view of the conflict.

He said U.S. pilots deliberately refrained from hitting military targets located in areas where high civilian casualties might result. But at the same time, he said, North Vietnamese forces, through deliberate actions, had caused 45,000 civilian casualties in South Vietnam in their latest offensive, including 15,000 dead.

Additionally, Nixon said total civilian casualties in South Vietnam as a result of deliberate Communist action were 600,000. He said 800,000 refugees fled North Vietnam after the Communists took over and at least a half million persons died in slave labor camps.

Nixon said the North Vietnamese were engaged in a deliberate propaganda campaign to cover up for "one of the most barbarous invasions in history—their policy of deliberate murder and assassination."

Nixon said it was time to "do away with this double standard," and brought up Waldheim's remarks.

Waldheim "seized upon this enemy propaganda... to attack what he called the American bombing of civilians... and yet not raising one word against the deliberate bombing of civilian institutions in South Vietnam," Nixon said.

Determined to stay in race

Eagleton denies drunk charge

HONOLULU (UPI)—Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton said Thursday a charge that he had been arrested for drunken driving was a "damnable lie" that doubled his determination to stay on the Democratic presidential ticket with Sen. George McGovern.

"If I were determined to stay on the ticket yesterday, I am doubly determined to stay on it today," he said following the broadcast report by syndicated columnist Jack Anderson.

As he spoke, at the annual convention of the Retail Clerks International Association, AFL-CIO, the 1,000 delegates yelled and cheered.

Anderson reported in Washington Thursday he had learned from a "former high official in Missouri" that Eagleton had been arrested between six and 11 times on charges which included drunken and reckless driving.

"Jack Anderson is not going to run me out of town or run me off this Democratic ticket," Eagleton told the delegates.

"I'm not going to accept any boldface, damnable lies. I'm willing to take my case to the people."

"I don't ask for your sorrow; I don't ask for your pity. I ask for your support of George McGovern."

The Democratic vice presidential nominee received repeated standing ovations from the convention, which earlier had endorsed the Democratic ticket.

Earlier, in an emotional news conference in which he appeared nervous and perspired freely, Eagleton had formally denied the Anderson charges and said he was on the ticket to stay.

"I am all the more determined to campaign on the ticket, to run the vice presidency and be elected vice president," he said.

"I want to set the record straight and I want to give the unvarnished context," Eagleton said.

"This statement by Mr. Anderson is strictly the type of rumor that I want to deny. He has no records. He has no evidence."

"I can only believe that Mr. Anderson was politically motivated and that this was an attempt to drive me off the ticket."

Eagleton said he had talked to McGovern by telephone about the charges.

"I told him that the Anderson broadcast was a total fabrication," he said. "He said he had full faith and confidence in me."

On several occasions since his announcement Tuesday that he had undergone psychiatric treatment, Eagleton said he would withdraw from the Democratic ticket if he felt he would harm the McGovern candidacy in any way.

"If my visceral feeling is that my candidacy is untenable and is negative insofar as the McGovern ticket is concerned, I'll not even wait for McGovern to give me the word. I'll give the word myself," he said on arriving here Wednesday.

"I want George McGovern to be the next president of the United States. I'm going to do everything I can positively to make sure he is that, and I will do nothing negatively to prevent him from attaining that goal."

In Custer, S.D., McGovern canceled a scheduled news conference, and his press secretary explained: "On reflection, he felt it would be pointless and that he had nothing further to add on the Eagleton matter."

Eagleton recounted two incidents, in 1962 and 1963, when he was stopped for speeding and subsequently paid a $35 fine. The second occurred in December, 1963, as he drove to Jefferson City, Mo., on an icy road when his car skidded and hit a sawhorse, denting the left fender and grill.

He said there are "absolutely not" any other charges against him in Missouri or any other state.

"Some of you who have been travelling with me know that the first sentence that I uttered was that rumors have followed me throughout my political career," Eagleton said. "This is precisely a case in point."

Eagleton, in Honolulu for several campaign appearances, said the first traffic incident occurred on March 11, 1962, when he was stopped for speeding and subsequently paid a $35 fine. The second occurred in December, 1963, as he drove to Jefferson City, Mo., on an icy road when his car skidded and hit a sawhorse, denting the left fender and grill.

Farenthold calls for resignation

HOUSTON (UPI)—State representative Mrs. Frances T. "Sissy" Farenthold, who ran second to Thomas F. Eagleton for the Democratic vice presidential nomination, said Thursday he should withdraw from the ticket because of his medical history.

Mrs. Farenthold, who said she was not now seeking the nomination, refused to comment on claims by columnist Jack Anderson that Eagleton had also been arrested six times for drunk or reckless driving.

"I want to hear further developments first," she said. "But I reiterate my position that he should resign. This seems the only plausible rationale for the Democratic party."

She said Eagleton's resignation was essential for Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota to capture the presidency.

Asked about the vice presidential nomination should Eagleton resign, she said: "I am certainly not seeking it and I don't think it will come up. I am not in the race."

Eagleton disclosed on Tuesday he had undergone psychiatric treatment three times in the past 12 years, including electric shock treatments. Mrs. Farenthold said this would be allowable if he were only expected to handle the ceremonial duties of the vice president.

"But when, in this age of violence, the vice president is truly only a heartbeat away from the presidency, it does matter," she said.

Strong economic recovery forecast for next 18 months

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Commerce Department said Thursday its leading economic indicators rose by nearly 2 per cent during the past two months, indicating the current economic expansion will continue strong for at least the next 18 months.

Coupled with other recent government reports indicating that inflation has ebbed, unemployment is down and wage increases are outpacing the rising cost of living, the expansionist trend in the economy could be expected to blunt Democratic campaign criticism of President Nixon's economic policies.

The Labor Department also had some good news, reporting that productivity, as measured in output per man hour, increased at an annual rate of six per cent in the private economy during the second quarter of 1972. This was nearly double the 3.3 per cent rate of advance during the first quarter, and the largest since the first three months of 1971.

But the Commerce Department also had some bad news, that the U.S. foreign trade deficit continued in June for the ninth consecutive month, and had the country headed for its second annual deficit in a row.

Assistant Commerce Secretary Harold C. Passer said the composite index of leading economic indicators went up 0.5 per cent in June, "continuing to signal strong economic expansion in the months ahead."

The index for May, originally reported as a 0.2 per cent gain, had been revised by an additional data to show a 1.4 per cent increase.

"For the second quarter, the index registered a 4.2 per cent gain, the strongest performance since early 1971 when the economy was recovering from an automobile strike," Passer said.

Fischer wins eighth game

REYKJAVIK — U.S. challenger Bobby Fischer, playing before television cameras for his "million of fans," Thursday night capitalized on a Boris Spassky beginner's mistake and won the eighth game of the world chess championship. The win put Fischer two points ahead of Spassky at a score of 5 to 3 in the 24-game, $250,000 world championship match. Spassky, who had blundered badly on his 19th move and left his defense weak, thought for about three minutes on the 37th move. Then he looked up, met Fischer's eye and offered the American his hand. The win was Fischer's fourth in six games against the Russian giant he had never beaten until the championship.

Farm subsidy cut fails

WASHINGTON — The Senate Thursday defeated proposals to eliminate subsidies for tobacco growers and to place a $20,000 per farm limit on subsidies to other farmers. The proposals were offered as amendments to a bill to appropriate $13.5 billion to operate the nation's agricultural, environmental and consumer protection programs for the 12 months ending next June 3. The bill, $1.6 billion higher than President Nixon proposed, was adopted by a vote of 77 to 3 after the subsidy limitations were beaten back. The same proposals were also defeated in the House.

Senator Ellender dies

WASHINGTON — Sen. Allen J. Ellender, 81-year-old dean of the Senate and a colorful Louisiana Democrat whose career stretched back to the days of Huey Long, died of apparent heart failure Thursday evening shortly after being stricken while campaigning for re-election. Ellender, who as president pro tem of the Senate was its highest elected official, died at the Bethesda, Md., Naval Hospital at 7:20 p.m. EDT, aides said.

President Nixon eulogized him in a statement as "a good friend, a fine senator and a splendid American," and ordered White House flags flown at half-staff. Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., was expected to succeed Ellender as Senate president pro tem — that is, presiding officer when the U.S. Vice President is absent. His death also left vacant the powerful chairmanship of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

More deficit spending urged

WASHINGTON — Three liberal economists urged Congress Thursday to ignore President Nixon's warnings and engage in heavier deficit spending for the sake of an energetic economic recovery. Paul A. Samuelson, John Kenneth Galbraith and Walter W. Heller said Nixon was seeking to put the brakes on the economy too soon, just nine months after the upswing started. They contended the stimulation of heavy deficit spending had initiated the recovery and was still needed to avoid "aborting" it.

State reveals 51 federal meat plants unsanitary

HARRISBURG (UPI) — An intensive review of 87 federally-inspected meat plants was revealed Thursday, showing 51 would have failed state inspection because of filthy, unsanitary conditions.

The state Agriculture Department review was an apparent retaliation to the federal takeover of the state meat inspection program, aimed at showing the federal program is inadequate.

Eric Fairchild, director of the state program, said the review was conducted July 17-19 by the chief inspectors in each of the state's seven regions.

Prior to the takeover, the federal government inspected only those plants dealing in interstate commerce; the state only those plants selling all their meat within Pennsylvania.

Fairchild said the following violations are "typical" of those found by state inspectors in the federal plants.

—Walls were splattered with dried fat, dirt and mold. There were pools of dirty water on the floors and no means of preventing dirty water from splashing on and contaminating meat products.

—Offensive odors from stagnant water and manure outside the plant that can draw insects and rodents.

—Conditions conducive to the breeding of rodents.

—Flies streaming in through an open door and flies crawling all over meat that will be sold to consumers.

—Employees spitting on the floor and evidence that edible meat products have been dropped on the floor and not discarded.

—Dirty laundry lying around.

—Employees do not wash their hands before returning to work from the restroom.

Fairchild said the review was conducted under a state law which requires the Agriculture Department to license all meat establishments in the state and renew those licenses every year.

"This inspection was to determine whether these plants met the requirements of licensing," Fairchild said.

"The inspectors were instructed to be fair and impartial. They were told to give us the information as they saw it and not to slant anything. We reviewed their reports and feel they are accurate."

The state meat inspection program was taken over by the federal government on grounds that it had inadequate personnel to make it "equal to" the federal program.

"We wanted to find out just what 'equal to' means," said agriculture secretary Jim McHale in discussing the state review of the federal plants.

"From these reports, I can see that we are in better shape than the federal government. I think we can do and have done a better job of meat inspection than they do."

Fairchild said the state had planned to introduce the review as evidence at a hearing on a petition to halt the federal takeover but the judge would not permit it. The state lost, but had appealed.

He said the review shows that there is more to meat inspection than just checking to see if the final product is wholesome.

He said the review shows that if a consumer puts more trust in federally inspected meat than state inspected meat, he is mistaken.

"The consumer has been lead to believe that when he sees the USDA mark of inspection, that assures him of the best meat he can buy. We believe the state mark of inspection means just as much or more."

At the same time, Fairchild was critical of the federal meat inspection regulations which he said were designed more to make sure the meat plant is clean than to assure wholesome products.

"The federal mark of inspection means things like the plant had paper towels instead of cloth towels in the washroom, that it had proper lighting and that sinks were made of steel instead of porcelain," he said.

"The federal government should be looking at the meat and not have this obsession with ceilings, walls and floors. The consumer's not going to be eating ceilings, walls and floors. All he cares about is clean meat."

A federal review of state-inspected meat plants from June 21 through July 17 found that out of more than 400 plants, more than 200 failed.

Fairchild and the Agriculture Department have charged, however, that this inspection was rigged to insure that the state would lose its inspection program.

Fairchild said that during the first quarter of 1972, 95 per cent of the state's plants were in compliance with the "equal to" requirements.

Tornado lofts four children 'just like Wizard of Oz'

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Four children playing in a backyard tent Wednesday evening were scooped up by a tornado "just like in the Wizard of Oz," carried 350 feet over a house and dumped in a vacant field.

The youngsters, Paul Smith, 12, his sister, Rose Ann, 9, their cousin, Richard Smith, 10, and neighbor Belinda Cowart, 10, were shaken and bruised, but not seriously hurt.

"It was just like in the Wizard of Oz," Belinda said. "It didn't feel real at first."

The children were playing in a tent behind the Smith home when a line of thundersqualls moved into the area. "It started to lightning and rain and it got real dark," Belinda recalled.

Paul sensed something was wrong when the bottom of the tent began to billow upwards. He yelled for everyone to "get down."

"All of a sudden, we were all wapped up in the tent," Richard said. "We were going around and around like somersaults. It hurt a little and I got dizzy."

Belinda said that "it felt like we rolled. I heard myself saying, 'I can't get out.' Then we crashed."

Lynwood Smith, Paul and Rose Ann's father, said he heard some thunder and looked out the window of his house.

"All of a sudden something jumped up like white lightning and a bunch of stuff went up in the air. The tent wasn't there and neither were the kids. I turned around to look for them and saw the tent on the other side of the house."

"I ran outside and found the children stunned, ragged looking and bleeding," Smith said.

The twister scooped the tent out of the back yard, carried it over the roof of the Smith home and dumped three of the children in a heap atop the canvas in a vacant field across the street. Richard was thrown out of the spinning tent and landed in the grass 100 feet beyond the others.

Soldiers abandon fortress

SAIGON (UPI)—South Vietnamese paratroopers pulled out of Quang Tri city's walled Citadel Thursday, abandoning the fortress to Communists until marine replacements can move in, military sources said.

Forty miles to the south, Communists units overran the Bastogne and Checkmate firebases, key links in the defense line protecting the former imperial capital of Hue.

In other fighting, North Vietnamese temporarily blocked a highway in the coastal highlands and took over four hamlets 33 miles northwest of Saigon.

The Saigon command also confirmed that 50 South Vietnamese marines were killed north of Quang Tri July 11 in the worst single helicopter crash of the war.

UPI reporter Ted Kurrus said South Vietnamese planes and ships from the U.S. 7th Fleet battered Quang Tri city and the surrounding area while the paratroopers were replaced by several battalions of marines.

The paratroopers, badly hurt in the weeks of fighting to retake Quang Tri, were expected to join two other airborne brigades protecting the western side of Highway 1, the vital supply route from Hue. They had moved into Quang Tri after taking part in the defense of An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon.

The paratroopers moved into the Citadel unopposed Tuesday, but later encountered stiff opposition from Communists in entrenched positions in the northwest half of the 13-acre enclave, according to officials in Saigon.

Senate okays development of new Trident submarine

WASHINGTON (UPI) —The administration won an important victory Thursday when the Senate refused to block its plan to speed up development of the new Trident submarine-missile weapons system.

On a 47 to 39 vote, members rejected arguments that it was foolhardy to proceed with the new supersub and its multiwarhead missile into production even before final blueprints were drawn up.

The administration fought hard for the speed-up, arguing that it was necessary to get started right away on the Trident as a replacement for the Polaris and Poseidon firing submarine by the time a new U.S.-Russian arms limitation agreement runs out in five years.

Otherwise, the administration argued, the Soviets would have no incentive to negotiate a new nuclear weapons control accord.

The Senate fight was not over the advisability of building the Trident and its ultimate 6,000-mile range missiles, but concerned whether to complete the research and development on the system before ordering it into production.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., proposed to block the speeded-up production of the new nuclear powered submarine. He introduced an amendment to cut $508.4 million of the $926.4 million authorization sought for initial work on the sub.

But Sen. John G. Stennis, D-Miss., argued for the full authorization recommended by his Armed Services Committee. That will "make it possible to get the end product three years earlier than if the (Bentsen) amendment prevails," he said.

"I am not opposed to the Trident system," Bentsen said. "But I am opposed to rushing precipitously into a long-range commitment before the facts are in."

Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., praised the Pentagon for its new "try-before-you-buy" policy of making sure a weapons system works through thorough research and testing before ordering it.

"If this request is approved, the Congress, despite all the emphasis on this new policy and the growing overall financial problems of this nation, would be approving hundreds of millions of dollars in the blind, because according to the Navy as yet there is not even a complete set of blueprints for this proposed submarine, a submarine which will be two-thirds the size of a World War II aircraft carrier..." Symington said.

Japan warned to reduce trade surplus with U.S.

HAKONE, Japan (UPI)—The United States warned Japan anew Thursday that it faced "serious" consequences if it did not reduce the huge Japanese trade surplus with the United States.

Economic diplomats of the two countries met for the third day of tense four-day negotiations that so far have produced few concessions from the Japanese side.

"The aim of the talks is to cut down Japanese profits in trade with America which the U.S. Department of Commerce economists say may reach $3.8 billion this year."

"I think you can expect some results here," said Harold B. Malmgren, President Nixon's deputy special negotiator for foreign trade. "It will be impossible to wind up this week without an agreement. The political ramifications are just too serious—not just for us, but for Japan."

Malmgren did not spell out all the consequences of the Japanese failure to give the United States help on the trade deficit problem, aside from the threat of protectionist legislation in the U.S. Congress.

"The United States would not be able to sustain pressures for congressional action," Malmgren warned. "Now is the time for decision. Either Japan is going to be in the international business community or she isn't."

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation denied a report in a leading Japanese financial newspaper that America had threatened to impose a special tariff on all Japanese goods. "It absolutely never has been considered," he said.

The report, attributed to official Japanese sources, appeared in Thursday's Nihon Keizai newspaper.

The United States wants to solve the U.S.-Japan trade problem by getting Japan to buy more American goods to help even out the trade figures.

Hanoi rejects cease-fire offer

PARIS (UPI)—The United States Thursday urged immediate discussion of a cease-fire at the Paris talks as the "key" to peace in Indochina as well as arrangements for the release of American prisoners of war.

The Communists rejected the call and accused the United States of endangering millions of Vietnamese by deliberately bombing dikes and dams.

A U.S. spokesman told a news conference after the four-hour session of the Vietnam war talks that the Communists "made it clear...the war must go on until all their political demands are met."

He and the South Vietnamese press spokesman said the other side had returned to the polemics of previous sessions rather than engaging in serious negotiations.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter told the 152nd meeting of the four-sided conference that a "cease-fire is the key" to peace. He asked North Vietnam's Xuan Thuy and Nguyen Van Tien of the Viet Cong to submit any "variation" of their own if they found President Nixon's proposals unacceptable.

"We see no valid reason why arrangements cannot be planned now for the time when our men (prisoners of war) will return to their country," Porter said. "What harm could it cause you to discuss with us arrangements for their eventual return, or the handling of their mail, or methods of checking their physical condition?"

Hanoi's Thuy said a cease-fire and prisoner exchange must come only after all pending political and military issues have been firmly settled, as spelled out in the seven-point Viet Cong peace plan of July 1, 1971 repeatedly rejected by the allied side.

"Only such a cease-fire would ensure lasting peace," Thuy said. Both he and Tien insisted the United States must underwrite any political settlement in Vietnam because they said the Saigon regime is Washington's own creation.

Thuy and Tien followed the rejection by demanding an immediate end to U.S. bombings. The North Vietnamese delegate said the United States "in particular has pursued its attacks against dikes and dams, purposefully creating disaster for millions of people during the coming flood season."

Flood victims to get fiberglass houses

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Flood victims of tropical storm Agnes in the Wilkes-Barre area of Pennsylvania will soon get temporary fiberglass housing similar to the kind that will be used by athletes at the summer olympics in Munich, government officials said Thursday.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development said it has leased 50 of the fiberglass laminated units valued at $350,000 for use on a site in Bear Creek, Pa., about nine miles from Wilkes-Barre.

Officials said the three and four-bedroom units, sleeping six to eight persons, have electric heating, refrigerators, stoves, complete baths and wall-to-wall carpeting.

The units will be ready for occupancy in about two months, the department said. They are built by Craftech International, LTD., of Croydon, Pa., which recently erected eight 2,000-square foot dormitories of the same construction to house olympic athletes at Munich.

Meany may support McGovern

DETROIT (UPI) — AFL-CIO President George Meany will bow to pressure from within the labor organization's Executive Council and endorse Sen. George S. McGovern for president, a high Michigan AFL-CIO officer said Thursday.

Tom Turner, president of the 285,000-member Detroit Metropolitan AFL-CIO Council, said he expects Meany to endorse the Democratic nominee by mid-September.

The national group, led by Meany, announced July 26 that it would not endorse either McGovern or President Nixon in the November election. But Turner said he was "sure Mr. Meany will take a firm position for McGovern."

Rock fest ban sought by mayor

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Mayor Peter P. Flaherty announced Thursday the city has filed for a temporary injunction to prevent a marathon rock n' roll concert in Pitt Stadium Aug. 4, 5 and 6.

Named as defendants were University of Pittsburgh Chancellor Wesley Posvar, Tim Stevens, and the New Image Inc. Flaherty said there would be inadequate overnight accommodations and toilet facilities for the large number of youngsters attracted to the rock festival in the city's Oakland area.

P.A. elementary principal resigns under board fire

PEN ARGYL — Faced with the possibility of demotion, the elementary principal of the Pen Argyl School District has presented his resignation from that post to the school board.

Frank Miele, who was not present at this week's board meeting, submitted a statement which was read publicly by Dr. Wilson Kresge, superintendent of the district.

Several board members had been pressing for Miele's removal from the job for the past few months. At last month's meeting, the anti-Miele forces were prepared to reassign him to a teaching position, but that move was blocked when an affidavit was submitted to the board by the former principal's ex-secretary.

Mrs. Nancy L. Roberts, of Pen Argyl, had originally resigned from her job as secretary to Miele, citing Miele's conduct and abusive language as the reasons for her decision.

However, in the affidavit to the board, she said four board members allegedly conspired to force Miele's resignation. Named as the alleged conspirators were Frank S. Brumbaugh, board president; Dr. E. R. Brumbaugh; Stanley Snyder and Robert Stratton.

Following submission of the affidavit at last month's meeting, the board tabled action against Miele until the document and the matter could be studied.

According to Mrs. Roberts, she had been prompted to write the statement concerning Miele's conduct and abusive language by the four board members.

Frank Brumbaugh denied Mrs. Roberts' charges.

Miele said he had been subjected to the "basest kind of harassment and intimidation" during his two and a half years in the school district.

He said he was first requested to resign last March, but added that no formal charges were brought against him.

Superintendent Kresge expressed regret over Miele's resignation, and at the same time spoke out against moves to force his own resignation.

According to Kresge, certain board members told the superintendent he would be forced to resign if Kresge did not get rid of Miele.

Kresge made his remarks after Frank Brumbaugh, board president, announced that all future school staff needs should be discussed and decided by the board before applicants are actively sought for the job.

He said the candidates should also be interviewed by the board.

Brumbaugh pointed out that Miele and other staff members in the past had primarily been hired on the recommendation of the superintendent.

The board president indicated he lacked "faith and confidence" in the recommendations of the administration.

Kresge countered by telling the board he would continue to give it his recommendations, but that the board was not obligated to accept them.

However, he said if the board members did decide in the future to go against his recommendations, they, not Kresge, would be responsible for the consequences.

Miele has accepted a position as an elementary principal in the Washington, D.C. area.

Five men seek seat on board

EASTON — Five men have filed petitions with the Northampton County Court seeking appointment to fill the single vacancy on the Lower Mount Bethel Township Board of Supervisors.

The deadline for filing the petitions was Tuesday.

At 11:30 a.m. Aug. 21 in the main courtroom of the Northampton County Courthouse, the county's four judges will conduct a hearing to determine which of the five will fill the vacancy.

Seeking to be appointed as interim supervisor until the 1975 election are the following:

Tony Plebani, Bangor R.D. 3, a general mechanic and operator; Alfred Q. Capecci, Jr., Martins Creek, a school teacher and businessman; and Elwood R. Savitz, Bangor R.D. 1, township secretary-treasurer and road master.

Also, Ronald Garis, Bangor R.D. 2, a technical representative for National Cash Register Co.; and Floyd Mensch, Bangor R.D. 2, in the farming and trucking business.

During the hearing, each of the five persons will be permitted to testify and have two witnesses testify as to his character.

The vacancy on the board was created June 12 when Adam Piergalini resigned.

Philip Sabatine and Richard Grucela, the two remaining supervisors, failed to agree on filling the vacated seat during the following 30-day period as called for by law.

At the end of the 30-day period, the matter automatically was placed in the hands of the court for disposition.

Utilities' rate hike blocked

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Public Utility Commission Wednesday suspended both electric and gas increases sought by the Pike County Light and Power Co., Milford.

The utility asked for a $167,700 electric service increase and a $45,300 gas rate boost. The PUC said both requests appeared to be excessive. It suspended them pending further investigation.

The firm serves 2,610 electric customers in the Matamoras and Milford areas, and 879 gas users in Matamoras and Westfall Twp.

If the company agrees to cut the electric hike by $64,700 and the gas increase by $3,300, it can put them into effect immediately, the PUC said.

County conservation unit seeks executive assistant

STROUDSBURG — The Monroe County Soil and Water Conservation District council decided Wednesday to toss the economic football to the county commissioners to see if they would approve the hiring of a special executive assistant.

The assistant's job would be to handle public relations and act as liaison between the district and the U.S. Soil Conservation Service.

Representatives from the SCS said their office is beginning to feel the burden of these duties and urged the county to consider opening the executive assistant post.

They pointed out it is a cost-sharing funded office for which the state would provide 50 per cent of the cost up to a $5,000 maximum.

County Commissioner Arlington Martin, a council member, pondered the feasibility of having a full time executive assistant for the district but gave in to the council's decision to pass the request on to the county commissioners' office.

"If you come up with a $10,000 fulltime man," said Martin, "it'll never go through."

The district council more or less agreed the position would be a parttime endeavor with a yearly salary offered in the $3,500 to $5,000 bracket.

At the request of the SCS, the Memorandum of Understanding between the district and the SCS was reviewed and accepted as still applicable.

It is scheduled for review once a year to determine if the original priorities established for each of the agencies remain the same.

The council also discussed possible exhibits for the West End Fair preliminary arrangements were made to procure a slide projector to present pictures of the many flood prevention and overall conservation projects in the Monroe County District.

The district council members were then reminded that candidates for the 1972 Conservation Farmer award must soon be arrived at and asked that they consider nominees to be submitted at their next meeting on Aug. 23.

Eagleton case has bitter irony

There is a bitter irony in the disclosure by Sen. Thomas Eagleton, Democratic vice-presidential nominee, that he has undergone psychiatric treatment, including shock therapy, on three occasions in the 1960s.

We remember well the declaration of the presidential nominee, Sen. George McGovern, that his primary consideration in selecting a running mate was to provide the American people with a vice president who, should fate place him in the White House, would be a man in whom the public would have the utmost confidence.

Eagleton's history of psychiatric counseling doesn't render him unfit for high office. Many others in high public and corporate positions have undergone similar therapy, and for similar reasons — sheer exhaustion brought about by a long period of intense activity.

But the very word "psychiatrist" has negative connotations to the man in the street, and it is entirely probable that such a background might shake the public's confidence. And that's just what McGovern neither wants nor can afford at this time.

McGovern's decision to stick by his running mate is commendable and honorable. And he is right, too. The fact that in 1960, 1964 and 1968 Eagleton underwent treatment for stress and depression doesn't mean that he is now susceptible to those same maladies.

But while it can be argued that anyone is liable to those same ills at any given time, many will argue, too, that a man who has succumbed before is more apt to do so again than is a man who never had that misfortune.

And misfortune it is. It characterizes not only Eagleton's difficulties, but the added handicap that now will descend upon the Democratic presidential slate. Right or wrong, people will question Eagleton's capacity to stand up under the strain of high office, and they will question McGovern's wisdom in retaining his running mate.

All this is conjecture, but fairly safe. Let's face it — the American public tends to vote as much on emotion as on intellect. What will tell now is the pace Eagleton sets throughout the campaign and how well he stands up to it.

Perhaps the most unfortunate aspect of this situation is that the vice presidential candidate must prove his mental well-being in the face of a citizenry that still harbors many of the prejudices of the dark past against any illness that strikes the mind.

Keep registering, kids

It is heartening to note that Monroe County not only has been in the forefront of the drive to register newly enfranchised 18 to 20-year-olds, but is planning to continue that program.

Because of the efforts of County Registrar Mrs. Cherry Rahn and her staff, an estimated 1,500 youths have been registered in the county. It wasn't an easy task. Special registration units were set up at East Stroudsburg State College and at all of the area's high schools to make it easier for the young people to register.

In addition, the registrar's office at the county courthouse was kept open many a night to accomplish the same goal, and a lot of work and long hours were involved. It was worth it. All you have to do is compare the 282 new voters registered from April to June to September, 1971, with the 1,500 registered so far.

It should be the goal and desire of every citizen worthy of the name to register to vote and cast his or her ballot on election day. The county certainly has gone out of its way to make this as easy and painless as possible for Monroe County's youngsters.

Now it is the turn of young people to reciprocate. What they must do is take advantage of the registration drive and then turn out to vote come Nov. 7.

Unless they do those two things, all the efforts of county officials, and the Supreme Court ruling that gave young people the vote in the first place, will have been for naught.

So Bill began calling off a lot of dishes, but the waiter kept shaking his head "no" to all of them.

Finally, Bill said, "I thought you said if I named it, you've got it."

And the waiter replied: "That's right, but you didn't name it yet."

The Pennsylvania Story

Keystone 'key' state

HARRISBURG — Will Pennsylvania fall into the Republican ranks this presidential election year?

This is a question that must be nagging Gov. Milton J. Shapp and other state Democratic strategists as the GOP on both the national and state scene begin to train their guns on Democratic Presidential Nominee George McGovern. The White House considers Pennsylvania as "key" to the president's re-election.

In addition to his attempt to oust President Nixon, the Governor also as titular party head, must bend every effort to keep the Legislature under Democratic control. The same holds true for the two fiscal offices (Auditor General and State Treasurer) and the Congressional races in the Keystone State.

The task looks awesome for Milton Jerrold Shapp.

South Dakota

Polls show the president ahead of the South Dakota Senator. Vietnam seems to be winding down, the economy appears to be brightening and organized labor doesn't seem all that enchanted with Mr. McGovern.

So much for the national scene at the moment. Of deeper concern to Governor Shapp must be the grimmer picture in Pennsylvania.

For openers, the Governor backed the wrong horse. At the start of this politically volatile year he came out four-square for Maine Senator Muskie, despite pleadings by state Democratic leaders that he bide his time before jumping on any bandwagon.

At the time, of course, Muskie looked like a sure-fire winner. As it turned out, Senator Humphrey took Pennsylvania in the Primary Election, but was an also-ran in the Democratic doings in Miami.

Then there are the rifts between Gov. Shapp and some Democratic powers. Auditor General Robert P. Casey is running for re-election at arm's length from Shapp.

In traditionally Democratic Philadelphia, the split is deeper. Mayor Frank Rizzo declared President Nixon one of the greatest we've ever had and just the other day the Mayor's campaign manager, Albert V. Gaudiosi, was named field director for the Pennsylvania Committee for the Re-election of the president.

These factors are a serious drawback to Senator McGovern because this most populous Pennsylvania city has lined up for the Democratic nominees for the past several elections and more often than not has been one of the keys to the entire State vote.

True, the governor has nominal control over the all-important Democratic State Committee considering he hand-picked its chairman, Dennis E. (Harvey) Thieman, who is doubling as the Governor's patronage chief.

Capitol Hill

But patronage on Capitol Hill is losing out to unionism and the Democratic Convention demonstrated that the Governor's grip on the State party machinery isn't all that strong.

Although the governor (and some other Democratic delegates from Capitol Hill) said flood recovery necessitated his skipping the Convention, it was ordained that Thieman would become Delegate Chairman. (It must be kept in mind that in vivid contrast to conventions past, regardless of party, the Governor was always honored as Delegation head. But last month the Pennsylvania Democratic Delegation met in Harrisburg and left — without electing the Governor as Chairman.)

But even in Miami the Governor played a weak political hand what with the Delegation chairmanship going to former Governor Leader. Rubbing salt in the political wound, the Pennsylvania Delegation missed the opportunity to cast its votes for McGovern to put him over the top.

Boiled down, Governor Shapp's major concern is Mr. Nixon's coat-tails, should the President be re-elected. Are his coat-tails long and strong enough to drag in sufficient Republicans to wrest control from either or both state legislative chambers?

It's going to be a long, hot summer for Pennsylvania Democratic strategists.

FDR mastered press corps

The President, obviously terrified in the give-and-take of a press conference, might draw a lesson from the master, Franklin D. Roosevelt. In the span of 12 White House years, he averaged 140 informal meetings with the White House correspondents per year.

His play — or device — was simple. FDR talked everybody to death, or, when a curve was thrown, laughed them away from the question. His 951st and 952nd press conferences, staged on May 24th, 1944, and May 28th, are good examples.

FDR (in his oval office, watching 150 correspondents file through the door): Everybody in? Good. I have several things to discuss this morning... Q. Mr. President, you have so far received far more than enough delegates to the Democratic convention to assure (President began to laugh heartily) — to assure your renomination for a fourth term except for one fact, unless you refuse it. Now, not asking what your decision is, but have you reached a decision (general laughter) whether to accept or refuse?

FDR (still laughing): You know, this is good. We get a different form of it once a week. This is a new one (removes glasses to wipe eyes). It's a brand new one. It's awfully interesting. Q. What's the answer, sir? FDR: I am making a list of the varieties of questions. Q. Are you going to answer them all at once, Mr. President? (gale of laughter sweeps the room). FDR: I think I will give you a real good one: time will tell. Q. Only 55 days of time left.

FDR (still laughing): You remember in 1940 there was some lady — at least she said she was a lady — who used to say, just after the convention, "93 days more of Roosevelt."

And the second time, she put the word "only" in. And she went right on down through (President laughs so heartily, clapping his hands, that his words are lost). And I bet that you have all forgotten her name...

Q. Mr. President, with the time of invasion apparently drawing nearer, is there anything you can tell us in generalized terms about our preparations and our chances for the success of the operation? FDR: Well, that's in the first paper I hold in my hand, thinking that some one would use the word "invasion." The word "invasion" is not quite adequate for the tremendous thing that is happening in Europe.

I suggest that instead of the word "invasion" we should call it "liberation." And I most heartily support that idea. It isn't a war of invasion — you want to get the word invasion out of people's heads all over the world — it's a war of liberation. This action in Europe, which is going to come off sometime this summer (Note: D-Day was 11 days off), is intended to be a liberation and not an invasion...

Sometimes, President Roosevelt would interpolate "I was reading a book the other day which states this case concisely" (which was untrue; he had little time for books). Or, "A foreman dropped in to see me and he said..." (which was also untrue). It is an irony that most White House press correspondents admire Democratic presidents, while their publishers despise them. The reverse is true in the matter of Republican presidents.

A reporter in the rear rank asked about the Senate Banking and Currency Committee advocating a rise in the price of commodities, especially cotton and textiles. FDR: Well, I grow lumber at Hyde Park.

Gunther's last 'Inside'

John Gunther's Inside Australia, completed and edited by William H. Forbis. (Harper & Row, $10).

John Gunther traveled through Australia, New Zealand and New Guinea in 1969 to assemble material for this ninth of his "Inside" books. He died before he could finish the writing. Time Magazine editor-correspondent William H. Forbis then revisited the area and finished the job.

The format is typically Gunther. The book ranges through geography, history, flora and fauna, food, local customs and interesting trivia. Its two-man authorship shows itself in observations such as these:

— (Chapter 1) — "There has been a quantum jump in quality of life and sophistication... An Australia of style, urbanity, education and culture is flowering..."

— (Chapter 4) — "Broadly speaking, the country seems quite satisfied to be badly dressed... The country is solid with people who have a low threshold of contentment — unambitious, middle class people who are indifferent about getting on."

The book notes both Australia and New Zealand are being "pulled and pushed into Asia" for reasons both strategic and economic:

"Economically, the link to Japan can only grow closer... Australian prosperity is now a component part of Japanese prosperity..."

"Over and over in Australia one hears these questions, 'How far would the U.S. go to protect us? Would it get into a major war for us?' Many Australians think not."

Handbook for Girl Scouts

How Girls Can Help Their Country, The 1913 Handbook for Girl Scouts, by W.J. Hoxie (Girl Scouts of the U.S.A., $1.95).

In 1913 Europe was on the verge of World War I and even in the United States, snug in those days behind its oceans, hints of future war were in the wind.

One of the forgotten products of that year — forgotten until now, at least — was a book called "How Girls Can Help Their Country," a Handbook for Girl Scouts.

A special facsimile edition of the book has been put out this year by the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. to commemorate the 60th anniversary of Girl Scouting this year.

The book is a delight, ranging as it does from teaching "useful knots" to warning that rubber should not be sat upon because it causes paralysis.

Under the heading of "Self-Defense", along with encouraging girls to learn to shoot, is advice on "How to Secure a Burglar with Eight Inches of Cord." It reads like this:

Make a slip-knot at each end of your cord. Tie the Burglar's hands behind him by passing each loop over his little fingers. Place him face downwards, and bend his knees. Pass both feet under the string, and he will be unable to get away."

How one gets the burglar to cooperate isn't explained.

There's even a trace of Women's Lib in the book — it proposed the notion (remember, this is 1913) that aside from "housewifery" and such jobs as "typewriting," women also could be successful in fields such as stock brokerage, medicine and architecture.

If nostalgia is an up-to-date as wedgie shoes, then in its field this handbook should be as captivating to readers as high button boots.

Radical youth explored

The Malcontents, by C.P. Snow (Scribner's, $6.95).

Having completed the 11 novels that make up his "Strangers and Brothers" series, Lord Snow has picked up a theme that appeared in the last of the series and elaborated on it in his new novel.

As in all of Snow's work the theme is intensely topical — this time radical youth.

It is a surprising novel, sympathetic and full of insight. Snow, in his late 60s, has kept the open and inquiring mind of the scientist he once was and he is not intimidated by generation gaps.

His story is about a small group of students, who call themselves "the core." They plan to expose an important English political figure in such a way as to strike a blow against racism.

But they too have been caught up in the corruption around them. A bribe has been paid. They discover there is an informer in their midst. Then a sudden death and all their futures are in danger.

For a time they stand apart to grapple with moral questions and must reconsider their loyalties and responsibilities. And then in various ways they reenter the tapestry of their society.

PEGGY POLK

Merry-go-round

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Faced with the recall of 235,000 to 400,000 old Corvairs which could cost lawsuits totaling tens of millions of dollars, General Motors has been let gently off the hook by the Transportation Department.

We have evidence, however, that the favorable report on the Corvair not only was rigged but that Doug Toms, the federal auto safety czar who issued it, never even read it before it was made public.

Instead, the report and its accompanying press release were handled in the 10th floor offices of Transportation Secretary John Volpe. Words were even put in Toms's mouth that he never spoke.

What Toms said in private about the problem-plagued 1960-63 Corvairs was altogether different than what the Transportation Department quoted him as saying.

"I've driven enough of these cars and I don't like them either," Toms confided to the Corvair's nemesis Ralph Nader. "I felt the right inside wheel jack up on the Corvair... I know Corvairs roll over and go out of control and people have problems with them."

Both Toms and Nader confirmed this private conversation to my associate Les Whitten.

Yet the official press release quoted Toms as saying that "handling and stability performance of these cars is at least as good as the performance of several contemporary domestic and foreign vehicles. The Corvair performance does not result in an abnormal potential for loss of control or rollover."

This statement was manufactured for Toms, he acknowledged, and put out by Volpe's office. Toms saw it for the first time after it had been released.

Tampering with safety

Not only was the publicity on the report prepared on high, but there's evidence the Transportation Department tampered with motorist safety in setting up the Corvair tests.

For instance, the 1963 Corvair was tested but not the 1960-61-62 models. Yet many of the 300 Corvair suits against GM involve fatalities in the older cars.

New tires were also used on the test cars instead of the worn tires that had figured in many fatal Corvair rollovers. And, unlike GM, Ford and other tests in the 1960s, which produced numerous Corvair rollovers, the new federal tests used "automatic pilots" instead of human test drivers.

These automatic pilots were designed by an institute, which was established by a $10 million grant from GM, among others, and is still funded, in part, with $1 million a year from the auto industry.

The Transportation brass were fully aware of this before they choose the Highway Safety Research Institute, University of Michigan, to participate in tests affecting its benefactor. An Institute spokesman denied to us that it is in "anybody's pocket."

Finally, the test results were reviewed by three distinguished auto experts, handpicked by the department, who had no research and testing credential in car handling.

The tests were vital to GM, which would have been compelled to start an immensely costly recall campaign if the Corvairs had been found unsafe. The recall could also have been used against GM in its multimillion-dollar litigation over the Corvairs.

Ralph Nader called Toms after the rigged Corvair report was issued. "There is a helluva lot of political overtones, some spoken, some unspoken, about this report. Aren't you supporting the Democrats? This is a political year, you know," Toms said to the nonpartisan Nader.

Both men agree this is what Toms said. But Toms insisted after-ward that he had meant to refer only to the politics of the report's critics.

Footnote: The new report fails to mention even as a footnote that Corvairs of all years have a defective heating system design that may permit lethal carbon monoxide to leak into the passenger compartment. GM, in a letter, has admitted the fault.

Washington Whirl

Roughing it — National Parks Czar George Hartzog is responsible for supervising the corporations which do business in the nation's parks. One of the biggest is operated by Donald Hummel who has, among others, the concession in Montana's Glacier National Park. When Hartzog visited the park recently, he gave evidence of how thoroughly he will police Hummel's operation by spending four days in the concessionaire's private guest house.

100 Scraps — United Artists' Max Miller read that the Treasury Department was selling worn out, ground up $1 to $100 bills to contractors for packing oil rigs and road construction. Since a thousand bills weigh only two pounds, Miller figured a few pounds would be enough to supply every movie editor in America with a potential $100 scrap in a plastic envelope.

'Shopper's Guides' rock industries

Denenberg's honesty helps consumers

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI)—Herbert S. Denenberg figures he has saved consumers $500 million by telling them what doctors, hospitals and insurance companies don't want them to know.

His method is straightforward and brutal. The medical and insurance establishments are still reeling from the beatings they took in his "shopper's guides" to hospitals, surgery, auto insurance and life insurance.

Denenberg, Pennsylvania's

maverick insurance commissioner, estimates that as many as 2 million of these guides are being circulated across the country by unions, consumer groups and commercial publishing houses. He gets hundreds of requests for the free booklets daily.

The guides, for the most part, do not offer advice. They contain hard hitting and sometimes astonishing facts.

In his "Shopper's Guide to Philadelphia Hospitals," Denenberg showed that patients may pay as little as $35 or as much as $200.17 per day in different Philadelphia hospitals.

He warned consumers in the "Shopper's Guide to Surgery" that to avoid being one of the 2 million persons who undergo needless operations annually, they must be as suspicious of surgeons as they are of used car salesmen.

His "Shopper's Guide to Life Insurance" ranked the 50 largest companies in order of average yearly cost and revealed that consumers pay 170 per cent more to the bottom company than the top for identical policies.

The "Shopper's Guide to Auto Insurance" disclosed that premiums for virtually the same coverage can vary up to 50 per cent from company to company.

"The public can't do anything about the fact that 15,000 people are being butchered every year due to unnecessary surgery if they don't clearly understand what is going on," Denenberg said in an interview.

"So how do you get the message across? The public is not going to read medical journals to find out about unnecessary surgery. They're not going to read actuarial literature to discover the true cost of life insurance. You've got to give them the facts."

Denenberg, 42, a cocky former professor, has a knack for getting publicity — most of it favorable.

Public response to his shopper's guides has been overwhelming. The reaction from the medical and insurance establishments has been anything but that.

One company threatened a suit to stop publication of the auto insurance guide. An auto insurance company complained that all 300 to 400 companies were not listed. Life insurance firms were upset because they were rated on price, not quality.

In no case, however, were the facts questioned.

"Our standard response to all of this stuff is very simple," Denenberg said. "If they don't like our shopper's guides, let them put out one of their own because the public ought to have the facts."

Prisoners injured during fight among Black Muslims

GRATERFORD, Pa. (UPI) 18 Four inmates were injured and another suffered a heart attack Thursday when a fight between two rival Black Muslim factions broke out at the Graterford State Prison.

Although 150 state policemen were rushed to the prison, Warden Robert Johnston said no force was needed to quell the 90-minute disturbance which broke out as prisoners were out of their cells and being returned from an exercise period.

"We didn't use force, we used persuasion. The inmates helped us cool this thing," Johnston told a news conference.

Johnson said the four inmates who received minor injuries and the heart attack victim were taken to the prison hospital. One guard was reported to have been punched in the jaw but X-rays proved negative.

Johnson refused to comment on exactly what caused the argument between the two sects of Black Muslims because "I don't want to exacerbate a bad situation. We are going to investigate this."

Allyn Sietoff, commissioner of the state Bureau of Corrections, said "I know the Muslims have been engaged in an internal struggle around differing ideologies. I can only assume that what happened was part of this struggle. There are a number of factions and splinter groups that we've seen emerging."

Asked if some of the Black Muslims were trying to coerce other inmates into joining their religion, Johnson said "Yes, I've had reports on that but I wouldn't say that that was the cause."

Johnson said the actual fight, which broke out as prisoners were coming back from an exercise period, involved only about 25 inmates. He said the actual fight lasted only about 20 minutes.

State agency offers help to flood victims

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Pennsylvania Association of Housing and Redevelopment Authorities offered Thursday to help flood-stricken communities apply for state and federal renewal funds.

The association said volunteers will provide information and technical help to any community which needs it. Communities without housing or redevelopment authorities will get priority.

William H. Wilcox, secretary of Community Affairs, urged the flooded communities to take the offer. Community Affairs already has granted $9 million in urban renewal funds.

"There's still a great deal of uncertainty on both the state and federal levels as to how much urban renewal and housing money we'll get in the wake of the flood," Wilcox said.

"We'll push hard for every dollar that Pennsylvania's communities need. But they must do their part, which means to the extent they're able, planning their renewal programs immediately."

Flood damages 70,400 homes

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Department of Community Affairs said Thursday that about 70,400 homes were either damaged or destroyed in the flooding caused by Hurricane Agnes.

Community Affairs Secretary William H. Wilcox set total damages to residences at more than $500 million. He said the estimates were based on data from the Red Cross, redevelopment authorities and the department's Bureau of Policy Planning and Information.

Face-lift real lift

Dear Ann Landers: May I say a word to "Teresa," the woman who wants a face-lift but can't make up her mind? I was in her shoes a year ago at age 45. My friends were asking me with increased frequency if I was unwell or tired. The bags under my eyes and my drooping lids made me look perpetually exhausted, hung-over or ill.

It got so bad I hated to look at myself in the mirror. I never was a vain person, but the appearance of wrinkles and bags had a very depressing effect on me. I discussed a face-lift with my husband and he assured me that I looked great the way I was. When I reported his comments to the plastic surgeon he said, "Most husbands react that way. They don't want to be responsible for surgery of any kind."

I went ahead with the face-lift. After a three-week healing period, during which I was swollen, black and blue and a real mess, I can say without exaggerating that I was thrilled with the results.

A woman who is pleased with her looks is easier to live with. You said in a recent column that most face-lifts are done for emotional reasons rather than cosmetic reasons — that a woman who has a face-lift frequently thinks it's going to make a big difference in her life, and of course it doesn't. Well, Ann, maybe it doesn't change a person's life, but it can certainly boost the morale and THAT'S a good enough change for me.

—Happier In Albuquerque

Dear Happier: If you feel good about your face-lift, and obviously you do, it was the right decision. Thanks for writing.

Dear Ann Landers: A lot of people who hate pets twist the facts to make it look like pets are taking over the country. A magazine article had this headline: "Pets outnumber people three to one." When I read the first paragraph I discovered "pets" meant canaries, and cats. This isn't fair. Please set the record straight.

—Animal Lover

Dear Lover: The record IS straight. What would YOU call them?

Dear Ann Landers: I was interested in the letter from the secretary who was pregnant and wanted to stay on the job "until they have to rush me by ambulance to the hospital to deliver." It seems her boss's wife wanted her out of the office in her seventh month because her presence was "embarrassing."

The problem has been solved in Washington, D.C. It is now a matter of law. I hope all employed women everywhere are aware of the legislation which was signed by President Nixon March 24th. To deny a woman employment because she is pregnant is in direct violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, according to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Pregnancy and all disabilities related to it are treated the same as any other temporary disability in terms of leave time, seniority, reinstatement, and insurance payments. Pass the word, Ann.

—Wm. J. Cameron, M.D., Dept. of Obstetrics and Gynecology, University of Kansas, in K.C.

Dear Dr. Cameron: Consider it passed and thank you for writing. (P.S. Are you aware that Paternity Leave is being offered by some companies? Yup. Poppa gets time off with pay!)

Dear Ann Landers: I am trapped in my own home by a brother who came to live with my husband and me a few years ago when he retired.

Immediately after breakfast he starts to drink beer. He drinks beer all day long, one can after the other. By the time I put supper on the table he is either nasty, silly, silent, or engaged in a full blown dialogue with himself, asking questions and answering them as if he were putting on a two-actor play, with himself taking both parts. It's nerve-racking!

Both my husband and I have tried to reason with him but it's useless. He flies into a rage and tells us he's old enough to know what he wants to do. Please tell me how to deal with this man. He has changed our home from a pleasant place to a house of quarreling and discontent. I can't ask him to leave because he has no living relative but me.

Trapped in Colorado

Dear Trapped: You are being grossly unfair to your husband. Tell your brother unless he is willing to cut out the guzzling, he will have to find himself a rented room somewhere because he is ruining your home life.

I'm sure you know he's an alcoholic — and there are places and alcoholic can go for help, if he wants to dry up.

Dear Ann Landers: That letter from the young girl whose uncle got funny with her made me hopping mad. Such uncles are few and far between, like one in a million. Your column cast ugly aspersions on the wonderful uncles everywhere. You owe them all an apology.

Maine Reader

Dear Reader: You are right when you say funny uncles are few and far between. But they do exist. I received over a hundred letters from grown women who wrote to express thanks. They said that particular column brought back some nightmarish memories but they were glad I printed it. In almost every instance their parents never had a clue about the funny uncle and they were afraid to tell. One reader put it this way, "I hope that column opens some eyes, Ann. Your column is a post-graduate course in human relations and kinky relatives."

Don't flunk your chemistry test. Love is more than one set of glands calling to another. If you have trouble making a distinction you need Ann's booklet, "Love or Sex and How to Tell the Difference." Send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request and 35 cents in coin to the Pocono Record.

SEX AT 15: (Q.) Last winter my mother had a nervous breakdown. She told my sister and me a lot of bad things that had happened to her. One was that when she was 17 she had a baby and put it up for adoption.

This affected me quite a bit, because my boy friend and I are very serious, and during the past year we have gone all the way several times.

I am wondering if what we are doing will affect me in the future. Is there anything I should do before it is too late? Please don't tell me to give up my boy friend. I just can't. Please don't ask me to talk to my mother. I can't do that either. Please answer quickly, because every night I dream about what might happen.

15 in Virginia

(A.) What your mother did affected her in the future. What you are doing will affect you in the future. You may not have a baby, but there will be effects just the same. You are already having them — fears and dreads and guilts.

If you cannot give up your boy friend, at least consider giving up intercourse. Talk to him about your fears. Ask him and yourself if sex at 15 is worth the price you are already paying for it.

SNUBBED: (Q.) There is this bunch of kids that hang out on the corner near my house.

One is an 18-year-old boy. He and I were friends until Sunday. All of a sudden he won't speak to me. When I try to talk to him he puts his fingers in his ears so he can't hear.

This sister says he says it is because I have changed. But the other kids say I haven't changed. Please tell me what to do, as I can't talk to him.

Embarrassed Girl in Connecticut

(A.) The boy's sister apparently talks to you. Tell her to tell him that the Constitution guarantees him freedom of speech, but if he refuses to exercise that freedom and speak to you about his specific complaint, there is nothing you can do about it.

FLIPPY: (Q.) I mean John and I are really flippy for each other. He is just barely 18 and I am nearly 15. My aunt says he is not too old for me but my mother says he is. What do you think?

—Jeanie in Maine

(A.) There is at least three years' difference in your ages, which is quite a bit. But the difference was the same before you two got "flippy" about each other.

That was the time for your mother to say no. Now it is better for John to see you in the open, at home, with your mother's knowledge and supervision, than for you to be sneaking around somewhere to see him. Show this to your mother.

Beep award announced at picnic

MARSHALLS CREEK — The Business and Professional Woman's Club combined a picnic at White Heron Lake with reports from delegates to the state convention.

The Stroudsburg branch was given two awards at the convention, one for stabilizing its membership and another for increase in membership. Two members of a district 8 of which Stroudsburg is a part were elected to state office: Betty Brown as director and Winifred Stevens as corresponding secretary. Hilda Kitzman and Millie Everitt gave the reports.

Thank you letters were read from recipients of the club's welfare contributions. Betty Peckman urged members to continue saving coupons which are redeemed by the Deborah Hospital, which has realized $800 so far from the local club's coupons.

Ann George and Roberta Evans were hostesses for the picnic supper held at the pavilion at the lake. The next executive board meeting will be held Aug. 3 at the Beaver House.

Their stay in Norway included a cruise on the fjords, visits to Viking sites and the Bridsdal and Stryn Glaciers. They spent four days in Stockholm and in Norway toured the Fairland country and castles including Hamlet's at Elsinore, concluding with four days in Copenhagen.

Hospital antique 'do' to offer county's past

EAST STROUDSBURG — Treasures and once-considered trash from Monroe County's past will spark the 28th annual Pocono Mountains Antique Show and sale to open Wednesday, Aug. 9, for a three-day stay in the gymnasium of East Stroudsburg High School.

Collectors of local scenes of yesteryear will find a wealth of nostalgia in the booth of Boy Godshall of Fairview Village. Old post cards and history books recounting the infant years of this community will highlight his booth. He also will bring miniatures and salesmen's samples, Philadelphia Centennial items and paper mache candy containers.

Frank Kerr of Minisink Hills will feature early American in his booth with a selection of wheelwright and carpenter tools from 1830 to 1870. A signed flax wheel dated 1822 is one rare item. For the railroad buff, early items include photos of the New York elevated engine and crew in 1879. For the collector of service memorabilia, he has an 1882 U.S. Army parade helmet plus magazine prints by James Montgomery Flagg, Harrison Fisher and Puck.

The Country Store of Hazleton will bring a Humphrey's Specific advertising medicine cabinet and a green sponge umbrella stand with lustre trim.

Furniture in the show will include an upright cobbler's bench and a punched tin pie safe, with a display of blue sponge and Pennsylvania pottery. The Schneiders of Mountaintop will draw mustache cup collectors with a rare majolica cup. They also have Steuben finger bowls, cut and colored Pairpoint candleholders and a peachblow bride's basket.

Feathers and fins are a former fatty's friends. But there's nothing that turns on the flavor of fish and chicken like a fancy French sauce!

The trouble with sauces, fancy French or otherwise, is that they're fattening. The most glamorous Gallic sauces are packed with un-ehic calories. Cheese and wine give them their flavor but fat and flour pack on the poundage.

Not only that, but they're bothersome to make. If you've been taking cooking lessons from TV, you know that most such sauces begin with flour stirred into melting butter, which still tends to lump — despite your best efforts and a whole drawerful of imported French wire whisks. After much whipping and whisking you've got a calorific conglomeration of cream, wine, flour, fat and cheese — at about 600 calories a cupful. Enough to booby trap even an innocuous stalk of broccoli!

You can duplicate the same velvety texture and exquisite flavor in this fabulous French translation that's a lot less trouble... and only one-third the calories.

Instead of flour, the sauce is thickened with arrowroot, a handy helper that has the same calorie count as flour... but two- and -one- times the thickening power. Arrowroot is sold in small bottles on the spice shelf of your supermarket... or in two-

Un-caloried French sauce

4 pound bags as "arrowroot flour" in the health food section. If you can't find it, use cornstarch (the same calories as flour but double the thickening power).

This sauce is made without butter or margarine, but you may add buttery flavor by using butter-flavored salt, or a few drops of butter flavoring, sold in small bottles on your supermarket spice shelf.

Slim Gourmet French White Wine and Cheese Sauce

(Try this sauce on broiled chicken breasts or baked flounder or sole. It's a simply smashing topper for broccoli, green beans and asparagus, too. You'll like it even if you're not a sauce person!)

2 cups skimmed milk
1/2 teaspoon salt (or 1 teaspoon butter-flavored salt)
pinch of nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
pinch of red cayenne pepper
4 tablespoons arrowroot (or 2 tablespoons cornstarch)

Just Between Us—

By Bobby Westbrook

Usually it's August before I begin to get the panicky feeling that summer is over before I've even started to enjoy it, but July still has four days to go and already I'm ready to mourn its passage.

Maybe it was having to pull up the covers in the middle of the night as cooler weather settled in. Maybe it was that the birds are doing more chirping and cawing than singing the love songs of spring. Or that the rabbits have outgrown their baby cuddly look and are slimming into teenagers.

But mostly it's the fault of the Stroud Community Club who not only have their plans all neatly lined up for Fall but even get around to telling me about it. Such efficiency is much more reminiscent of a brisk fall day than mid-summer.

It's amazing how the hundreds of clubwomen I see so regularly during the winter seem to vanish without a trace once the May luncheons are over. They must sneak in to do their food shopping either early in the morning or late at night, stay holed up during the noonday sun, and do all their communicating with the outside world by telephone.

Actually what happens during the summer is that everybody gets so involved in internal affairs: visiting relatives, picnics, watching the children in the pool, that the outside world sort of ceases to exist.

Except, as the Stroud Community Women remind us, that club job they took on so blithely last Spring, is getting closer all the time.

Jack O'Brian's

New York's Voice of Broadway

NEW YORK — We said hello to the original Dolly just after she got back Up Over after being Down Under. . . . And according to the lady, Carol Channing of course, Australians are another category of girl's best friends. . . . Sit down Sydney, and tell us Carol. . . . How are things in the South Pacific?

"I may not strike you as the usual debutante," said Carol, looking sparkling enough for any coming out party, "but I made the most fabulous debut in Australia. It was my theatrical debut Down Under, at the Princess Theatre in Melbourne, and I was just as excited as the night I played the Drury Lane Theatre in London for the very first time.

"As a matter of fact, I'd decided to take the Aussies a special adaptation of my

Drury Lane Show, figuring that the English sense of humor hadn't altered all that much during the years of colonization. I must admit, though, to some private doubts about the matter. I really expected some wild and woolly types, like Bill Hickock and Natty Bumppo and colorful figures of the Old West. Imagine my surprise and delight when I discovered that Australians generally are gracious, sophisticated people living in very handsome and thoroughly modern cities. (That's not to say that they lack a marvelous individuality, however.)

"I fell in love with Australia the moment I stepped off the plane. I'd made a quick stopover in Sydney, just to say hello. Their last remaining legitimate theatre had been demolished earlier — isn't that always the way with progress? — so there wasn't a home for my show, but the Sydneys certainly made me feel at home.

"When we landed in Melbourne, there was such a crowd at the airport I thought Henry Kissinger was paying a visit. I looked all over the plane for him hoping to get one of those famous Kissinger kisses (he has his own paparazzi, you know), when someone informed me they were all waiting to meet me!

"I couldn't imagine how I could have drawn so expectant a crowd at the airport, until I was told that my advance publicity man (Australian, thank heaven) had told them I was the 'French student riots, Germaine Greer and the Moscow Circus all rolled into one.' For a minute I thought of unfurling my American flag and disembarking with it wrapped around me while I sang a special medley of 'Dixie,' 'God Bless America' and 'I Love a Parade.' I mean, I just couldn't disappoint all those Aussies! Fortunately, cooler heads prevailed, and I was the embodiment of chic when I finally stepped off the plane.

"From that point on, it was mostly a matter of getting used to Australian hyperbole. They're the closest things to Texans on earth! The kind who'd see a very tall and unattractive girl coming down the street and say, as tactfully as only Texans can and in those booming tones that go straight to God's ear: 'My, don't that filly just touch the skies, though! You just can't help loving men like that. Girls, if you ever have the chance, grab yourselves an Australian or Texan rancher!'

"One Australian gentleman said I was 'a lobster steeped in honey' (if you can imagine that) and another offered me 50,000 acres of his 500,000 acre sheep ranch if I'd just fly out (at his expense) and sing him a chorus of 'Hello, Dolly!' Well, I never thought I'd be saying 'lamb chops are a girl's best friend,' but I couldn't resist picking up the phone and singing him a verse, just to thank him for his sense of style. Of course, the telephone company called a halt to that kind of gesture when they started getting more requests than the local Melbourne radio station.

"As a matter of fact," added Carol, "now that I've actually been to Australia, I know that it isn't like the Old West, where they rarely saw a girl. In Australia, they really know how to appreciate a girl. After all, where else would a Stage Door Johnny call for you after the theatre with a Cadillac and 100 kangaroos so you could select matching pelts for your floor length coat?"

"Some parts of Australia reminded me of dear Proper and Predictable Boston, where every fork has its mate and you know you're in the company of $$$, and some parts were just as crazy and wonderful as the madness of New York. You know, the beaches there are even more incredible than those still-wild stretches along the California Coast!

"Yes, girls of the 20th century, I see an Australian in your future too. Once that invitation comes, you won't be saying 'Hurry, Sundown,' but 'Hurry, Qantas,' and you'll love them as much as they'll love you. I know, I've been there, and my husband's lucky I'm coming home!"

New York City taxi czar Mike Lazar's daughter,

Helaine Toby, wed Princeton Paper Co. heir Steven Mark Harris of Portchester, N.Y. Both kids still go to college. . . . Like 'em or hate 'em, 10,000 cats and dogs are born every hour. We still think they all mess up our block. . . . Roman Polanski (widower of murdered Sharon Tate) now gets his kicks knocking the media: "I really despise the press." Ho hum.

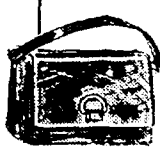

John Barleycorn pub owner Terry O'Neill bought the Riversdale Hotel — in Cork, Ireland. . . . "Fiddler" producer Hal Prince is thinking of operating a repertory troupe at the Phoenix Theater. He's directing there next season. He's rich enough for it. . . . Very proper actress Ariane Heller refused to disrobe for a scene in the new Streisand film, "Up the Sandbox." Claimed she didn't know when signed she'd have to peel but finally gave in when director Irv Kirschner promised he'd teach her to ride a bike: Ariane is six years old.

Parisian writer Danielle Hunebelle is a French smooch-and-smitch lass who dated Henry Kissinger, once anyway, and promptly dashed to her typewriter to detail the no doubt intimate intrigue: its stature got it paperbooked over here, translated from the original smitch-in-French. Danielle swears Dr. Kiss-Kiss repeatedly exclaimed to her, "I'm your slave, Danielle!" Danielle has written two other novels.

I followed the case of Jackie Onassis' legal hassle with a photographer who harassed her with more than a casual interest.

"For years, I have been looking for something legal to charge my husband with and I think she has set a precedent. As I told him the other day, 'You point that Instamatic at my teeth one more time and I will have you arrested. You are like some kind of a nut with that camera. Why can't we be like other families who have pictures of their children in diapers and in their high school graduation gowns on the same roll?'"

"And miss shots, like these?" he asked, tossing me a package of prints.

I shuffled through an entire roll of pictures showing the kids and me huddled in a semi-circle in front of a restroom.

"Where were these taken?" I asked.

"You know very well where they were taken. Niagara Falls."

"How can you tell?"

"Your hair is wet," he giggled.

I don't mind the clicking and dancing around half as much as the humiliation of having an audience. Once in Nova Scotia my husband, Stanley Kramer, gathered our family together and explained he was going to shoot some film of us coming out of a cave. He wanted us all to go inside and at the signal come out scratching our stomachs and yawning like we had been hibernating.

I wanted to put him in a home then, but the kids said let's get it over with. Besides the beach was deserted.

At a given cue, we all emerged, scratching our stomachs and yawning, only to realize the sightseeing bus had unloaded and we had 80 cameras trained on our every move.

The other night, he proudly got out his albums of snapshots and relived some of our more memorable vacations. "Here's a picture of you in a phone booth near the Lincoln Memorial. Here you are eating a banana on a park bench at Grand Canyon. I love this one. It's your arm hanging out of a cab in New York City.

"Look at this one. It shows you from the rear running from me in your bathing suit in California. And this one. You are shouting an obscenity into the camera at Yellowstone National Park." He paused, "And will you ever forget this one. This is a close-up of you on that deep sea fishing outing we took in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Know how I can tell?"

"I know how you can tell," I said miserably. "Get your camera. I am going to be sick again."

Farmers to receive milk checks

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Milk Marketing Board said Wednesday it will distribute checks totaling $200,000 to farmers who formerly supplied milk to a bankrupt

Honesdale milk products company.

The board said payment will be made on July 28 in Honesdale to 100 farmers who were involved in the bankruptcy proceedings against Cleo Milk Products Co., Inc.

The board said the $200,000 comes from a legislative appropriation made in 1971 for farmers who were owed money by the bankrupt company.

An additional payment of $28,000 will be made to the same farmers at a later date, the board said.

Choir's origin

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The famed Mormon Tabernacle Choir, which has 375 members, was founded during days when Brigham Young was leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The choir has performed around the world.

Car inspections date delayed

STROUDSBURG — A spokesman from the Pennsylvania State Police barracks in Stroudsburg said Wednesday the expiration deadline for all number four motor vehicle inspection stickers has been extended for one month.

Motorists who have inspection stickers which should expire July 31 now have until Aug. 31 to have their cars inspected. The extension was granted due to the mixup and delay in getting stickers to service stations after the flood damage suffered in Harrisburg.

Priest in Congress

DETROIT (UPI) — Father Gabriel Richard, who helped organize the University of Michigan in 1817, was the first Catholic priest to serve in Congress and was the founder in 1804 of a women's academy to train teachers, which was the earliest effort at teacher training in the Northwest Territory.

1. Six spades. There is no way of treating this hand scientifically; the best you can do is take a shot at what you think you can make. Three notrump normally indicates a balanced hand containing 25 to 27 high-card points. Consequently, a spade slam is almost a sure thing.

Even a grand slam could be there if partner had exactly the right cards, but it would be foolish to take a blind shot at it. Partner is not altogether barred from bidding seven over six, but in practice he almost invariably passes.

2. Pass. Here there is little prospect of a slam and the only real problem is whether to pass or bid four spades. Four spades, properly construed, would indicate a desire to play at that spot rather than three notrump and would not suggest a slam.

A pass would probably work out best in the long run, since

Has seen them everywhere

Singing missionary finds miracles

NEW YORK (UPI) — Singing missionary Lee Russell believes in miracles.

He has seen them happen in his long journeys to foreign lands as a gospel singer.

In Burma, Russell said in an interview, a Buddhist who had heard him preach and sing challenged him to pray for a deaf and dumb woman in the audience.

"I prayed for her and she began to speak," Russell said. "I saw a miracle. And I've seen many since then."

If Russell had not chosen to become a singing missionary, he might have become a star in the company of say, a Tony Bennett or an Andy Williams.

He was a sailor on the Great Lakes at the time he decided to try his luck as a singer. In 1940 he began his career as a soloist in the Showboat night club in Cleveland.

Turning point

In 1950 Lila Ginter entered Russell's life. She was retiring after 30 years as a missionary. Russell was in a recording studio when Miss Ginter walked in to make some tapes of gospel songs to be sent to Africa.

"She was ready to record but needed a singer," Russell said. "I volunteered. In the middle of 'The Old Rugged Cross' I made my decision."

Lila Ginter went to the ambassador from Zambia at the United Nations, whom she had taught in Africa, and gained clearance for Russell to go to his country.

He also went to Burma, Zambia and South Africa on a gospel mission that lasted six weeks and covered 30,000 miles.

"I had interpreters to help me," Russell said. "In between songs I would discuss the next song and compare it with the text of the Bible and tell the interpreter what the song meant."

Even though his audiences in many cases could not understand English, they listened, Russell said.

"The people had a deep faith in the word of God and believed," he said.

Shortly after he became a roving gospel singer, Russell began composing his own hymns. Several albums have been recorded by Steepletone Records in New York's Radio City Station.

"I've been able to finance my mission through royalties from these records," Russell said.

Russell's experience as a singer of popular music helped him considerably in composing his music and none of his songs are repetitious. All express his deep convictions and some are written in a lively tempo.

"There is a great charismatic movement going on," Russell said. "Teen-agers are getting involved with this new music and are taking a new attitude toward the word of God."

EAST STROUDSBURG — The Youth Group of St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Craigs Meadows will hold a car wash at Grant's Auto Center, Pocono Plaza Shopping Center, on Saturday, August 5, starting at 9:30 a.m.

Teaching opposed

MANILA (UPI) — A constitutional convention proposal to include compulsory religious instruction in the public school curriculum has drawn the opposition of the Association of School Superintendents.

Quaintness next to Godliness

Who says New England has a monopoly on picturesque, white-painted churches? The Wallpack Methodist Church, nestled in greenery in Wallpack Township on the New Jersey side of the Delaware River, provides as pretty a picture as any off a Vermont common.

MORRISVILLE — The Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission will meet Tuesday, August 22 at the Administration Building in Morrisville.

Sewerage permits await plan

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County Planning Commission Administrator Doug Williams Thursday reported sewerage regulations now in effect pertaining to subdivisions.

"At the present time, owners of lots of less than one acre in size within subdivisions approved after May 15, 1972, will not receive a permit for on-site septic systems according to Department of Environmental Resources' new legislation," he said.

He pointed out "as soon as the Weston plan is adopted, they will be able to, but not until then." The Weston Report is for sewerage and water for all townships which drain into the Lehigh River. The TIRIS study, containing sewerage and water plans for the Delaware River Basin, is the other report also affecting Monroe County.

Williams added "within two weeks I am promised the final Weston Report including pertinent data, at which time the Planning and Zoning Commission, a staff engineer, and myself will review it to see if it is acceptable for County use."

Maternity policy not adopted

EAST STROUDSBURG — Pauline Peterson, superintendent of the East Stroudsburg School District, clarified a point Tuesday regarding the discussion at Monday's board meeting regarding maternity leave guidelines. She said more discussion will be needed before the board makes a decision.

Due to confusion at the meeting, representatives of area news media reported revised guidelines were adopted.

Forty-eight certificates were collected, bringing the total to date to 84. The board inspected 14 eating and drinking establishments and investigated seven cases of unsanitary conditions.

Six dead animals were removed from the streets and six dog bite cases were investigated. Five of the animals were confined for ten days and found free of disease. One dog is still being checked.

be sent to borough council, along with a zoning book. Council will examine the book and map, advertise for a public hearing, and act on the proposed ordinance.

The revised map contains no changes in Stroudsburg's second and third wards and only slight modifications in the fourth and fifth wards. The significant revisions suggested by the commission are in the first ward.

A relocation of the zoning district line between the commercial and industrial zones was approved by the commission for the first ward.

Under the proposal, the commercial zone would be expanded to include the easterly side of North Second Street from Courtland Motors north to Washington Street.

The industrial zone would be reduced in size to include only the easterly side of First Street and the area north of Washington Street.

Most of the existing residential zone would be relabeled R2-A, including the area west of Second St., all of Third Street, and the area north of the Big N department store. Zone R2-A is a residential, medium density zone.

During the election of officers, Stewart Woody was chosen as chairman of the commission. Woody had been vice-chairman and acting chairman since the resignation of Donald James.

Other officers elected were Mrs. Alice Baumgartner, vice chairman, and Dr. David Johnson, secretary.

Board receives guidelines concerning moth projects

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County Commissioners have received new guidelines adopted by the Department of Environmental Resources for cooperative county-state-federal projects for gypsy moth control.

According to James O. Nichols, forest pest control supervisor, the DER will provide the commissioners with detailed maps in August showing areas heavily infested by the insect, along with a preliminary indication of the problem to be expected in the following year.

The major objective of the new guidelines will be to provide temporary tree foliage protection from gypsy moth defoliation and offer relief to residents in forested areas from a serious public nuisance.

The following areas will be considered by DER for aerial control treatments under a state-supervised contract:

— Forested parks, public recreational areas, special use areas, historic and natural sites, and non-profit campgrounds.

— Forested communities or rural residential areas in a forested environment and containing generally from two to fifty homes per 50 acres. This priority also provides for the treatment of a forested buffer zone if a serious hazard is anticipated from caterpillars migrating from defoliated woodlands.

— Privately-owned recreational or otherwise high-value forested tracts may be considered for treatment under a state-supervised contract, providing application costs are paid for by the owners.

— Areas which will not be treated by DER include:

— The relatively low or average value, generally uninhabited and undeveloped tract of forest land. Instead, the DER is engaged in a biological control program aimed at establishing natural parasites for eventual control of the gypsy moth.

— Priority areas where a biological collapse of the infestation is expected in the following year.

— Areas less than 50 acres in size, except for unusual circumstances.

— Villages or other communities where the trees are scattered and accessible to treatment by ground spraying equipment.

— Residents or property owners in a proposed area objecting to having their property treated.

Pets may be entered in the following categories: largest, executive (mayor)-council type plans, one is a council-manager plan and another is the small municipality plan. The last plan suggests an alternative for county government.

It should be stressed, however, that within these major suggestions, as outlined by the state, there are many sub-options to be considered by the municipalities' government study commissions.

These, for example, would include a suggestion as to how many members council should contain. In short, the plans are flexible enough to allow small municipalities to develop a structure allowing it to operate efficiently without a home rule charter.

In all of the executive council plans, there is a mayor (a district attorney is included when considering counties) and a council which may consist of three, five, seven, or nine members, to be elected at large, by district, or a combination of at large and on a district basis.

The council is responsible for the legislative powers of the municipality. The executive (mayor) supervises municipal departments and appoints department heads with the approval of council.

The executive may veto ordinances, but the council

Officials could expand Manor

By BOB GROFF
Record City Editor

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County Commissioners may contract a hospital and health care consulting firm to conduct a feasibility study on the possible expansion of Pleasant Valley Manor, the county home located in Snyder'sville.

The commissioners met with representatives of Steiner Associates Thursday afternoon to discuss the matter.

Earlier in the day, the county officials approved an agreement to place up to 25 county home residents in Stroud Manor, a private East Stroudsburg nursing home, to relieve some of the overcrowded conditions at the county facility.

Lawrence Butz, administrator of the county home, told Lindley Jackson and Kenneth Atkins, of the consulting firm, "people in the county are in need of health care and they just aren't getting it. We are filled to capacity and have been for five years."

"We have exhausted our resources as far as placing these patients where we can reasonably afford it. We have to decide whether to alter the original building or expand in another direction."

"We also need to know how many rooms should be built, the arrangement of them, and what services we can afford to provide."

Butz said the county home has 71 beds which have been approved by the state Department of Public Welfare. Most of the beds are in the new wing of the facility, completed in 1965 at a cost of $700,000.

However, 17 beds are in the original building and Butz indicated it "is only a matter of time" before they are condemned by the state Department of Public Welfare because the original building does not meet with federal Life Safety Code standards.

Beds have been removed from the second floor of the original building, leaving the 17 on the first floor of the facility.

Commission Chairman Mrs. Nancy B. Shukaitis said, "The county finds itself in the position of having a nursing home for the indigent with 90 some beds, until the state ordered us to close the second floor of the original building."

"And we may have to close the first floor as well and that would limit us to only 54 beds. We have been faced with as many as 80 patients at one time."

We want to know if it's more feasible to plan for expansion, rather than purchasing services, which we have now been forced to do (with Stroud Manor). And if it is feasible to expand, how much should we plan for."

Mrs. Shukaitis added the county was also interested in determining if the original building, in violation of three major safety code standards necessitating an anticipated large amount of money to correct, can be used for other purposes.

Jackson told the commissioners the firm, if contracted for the feasibility study, would come up with a plan to include the next 15 years. He said the study would project the number of beds the county should provide in five year periods.

He added the study would include an evaluation of the present facilities by the firm's architectural and structural experts.

The firm will also supply information on how to fund expansion if that is the recommendation of the study.

Jackson could not give the commissioners an estimate of the study's cost. He explained he would draw up a proposal, expected to be in the hands of the commissioners by the end of next week.

Mrs. Shukaitis pointed out if expansion is recommended, there is a possibility of having to expand the $97,000 sewage treatment plant completed for the manor in 1970.

When the plant was built, the capacity was greater than what was needed at the time. However, because of a high water table problem in the area where the county home is located, the plant comes close to being at full capacity at some times.

Board agrees to transfer patients to Stroud Manor

STROUDSBURG — The Monroe County Commissioners signed an agreement Thursday allowing placement of up to 25 patients from Pleasant Valley Manor, the county home, into Stroud Manor, a private East Stroudsburg nursing home.

For some time the commissioners explored means to relieve the overcrowded conditions at the county home, and one of the options available for immediate relief was the nursing home agreement.

The contract calls for Stroud Manor to receive $18 per day from the county for each patient placed in the home.

The per diem rate does not include the following services to be billed as extras: Drugs; physical therapy; occupational therapy; or ancillary charges and equipment if that is ordered by a physician and if not covered by federal medical funds.

The agreement has been approved by the state Department of Public Welfare.

Of the $18 per diem cost, the county will contribute $4.49 with medical assistance funds from the federal government picking up $13.51.

The commissioners emphasized the agreement is for a one year period, and can be broken by either the county or Stroud Manor if 90 days notice is given by either party. The contract is renewable upon renegotiation of the costs.

In another matter, the commissioners announced a special summer registration for potential voters will be held from 2 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, Aug. 30 at the West End Fairgrounds.

Commenting the special registration their has become "a tradition," Commission Chairman Mrs. Nancy B. Shukaitis said there will be several other special registration sessions held between

Aug. 30 and Oct. 10, deadline for voter registration for the November presidential election.

The board also approved a request for $5,000 from the county planning commission as that organization's 1972 budgeted allocation.

Mrs. Shukaitis announced the receipt of $240 derived from the sale of maps.

Nursing program possible at ESSC

EAST STROUDSBURG — East Stroudsburg State College may start a bachelor's degree program in nursing in September, 1973.

It would make East Stroudsburg the only college in northeastern Pennsylvania with such a program. West Chester State College is the nearest school presently.

Dr. Mary Watson, formerly a consultant in the Pennsylvania Department of Health, is writing a proposal to the state Board of Nursing Examiners.

The plan must be submitted by October. If approved by the nursing board and the Department of Education, about 25 students could be enrolled the first year.

Dr. Watson is hopeful that number would be increased to 200 within five years.

"If the cost of health care was a valid index to health status," she notes, "America would be the healthiest nation in the world."

This, however, just simply isn't the case. While the U.S. spends 6.7 per cent of its Gross National Product — or $294 per person — Sweden devotes one per cent of its GNP, or $245 per person, and outranks America in all primary health areas, she points out.

The primary base of assignment for ESSC students would be the General Hospital of Monroe County. "We have a strong conviction we can do the job and do it well because of the proximity," says Dr. Frank Sills, physical education professor and organizer of the 1968 report.

The program would require 52 general education credits, 51 nursing curricula credits and 27 elective hours.

Burnley employees get awards

EAST STROUDSBURG — Certificates were awarded to 26 employees Thursday upon completion of a course in health and hygiene given in the Educational Department of the Burnley Workshop.

The Educational Department was organized in May, 1971, after a program was presented by Sal Palazzolo, executive director, to the board of directors for approval.

The program offers courses that are academic, non-academic, recreational, and social in nature. The employees will learn and be trained in skills they will need to be independent and functioning members of their community. Mrs. Mary Gearhart has been appointed director of education and Mrs. Diana Shanley and Mrs. Joseph Bilbow, caseworkers and assistant instructors.

Courses in health, good grooming, sex education, marriage and family planning, and drugs and drug addiction, have been presented to date. These courses will be repeated and new ones added as the need arises. All employees are graded at intervals to check individual progress, and an evaluation of work is kept.

Employees honored

Burnley Workshop officials, Mrs. Mary Gearhart, director of education, left, and Walter Strunk, vice-president, present graduation certificates in a health and hygiene course to Carol Schumaker and Forrest Marin, two of 26 workshop employees successfully completing the program.

Without home rule, voters must select alternatives

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a four-part series on home rule and its possible application in Monroe County.)

By MAUREEN RUFFE

Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — If voters in Monroe County decide to restructure their local government without going through the complex process of drafting a home rule charter, they will have to select an alternative plan of government.

According to Home Rule Act 62, there are six plans to select from for local municipalities. Three are executive (mayor)-council type plans, one is a council-manager plan and another is the small municipality plan. The last plan suggests an alternative for county government.

It should be stressed, however, that within these major suggestions, as outlined by the state, there are many sub-options to be considered by the municipalities' government study commissions.

These, for example, would include a suggestion as to how many members council should contain. In short, the plans are flexible enough to allow small municipalities to develop a structure allowing it to operate efficiently without a home rule charter.

In all of the executive council plans, there is a mayor (a district attorney is included when considering counties) and a council which may consist of three, five, seven, or nine members, to be elected at large, by district, or a combination of at large and on a district basis.

The council is responsible for the legislative powers of the municipality. The executive (mayor) supervises municipal departments and appoints department heads with the approval of council.

The executive may veto ordinances, but the council can overrule him with the vote of the majority plus one.

The variances in the three types of executive plans revolve around the establishment of an administration department, which would be set up to assist in the preparation of the budget, operate central purchasing, personnel, and accounting systems, and perform other duties of the mayor as set forth by the municipalities administrative code.

Under executive-council plan A, the establishment of the department is optional. In plan B, the establishment of the department and the appointment of a director of administration is mandatory.

In plan C, a managing director of the administration must be appointed and approved by council. He supervises government departments and reports directly to the executive (mayor).

In the council-manager form, again a council is elected to take care of the legislative and policy making decisions. A district attorney is also elected in the case of a county.)

It may be composed of the same amount of members, to be elected in the same manner as in the executive-council plan.

The council, may however, choose one of its members as mayor, instead of letting the executive be elected by the people. The mayor is actually only a ceremonial head for the municipal government; the council appoints a manager to carry out all its administrative duties.

The small municipality plan, which may be adopted by any local government containing less than 7,500 people, provides for an elected mayor and councilmen.

With this proposal, the council only consists of two, four, six, or eight councilmen in addition to the mayor. The mayor is elected at large, but the councilmen may be elected the same way as was suggested in the other council plans.

The mayor, in this case, would preside at all the council meetings, would have a vote, but would not have any veto powers. He would be responsible for the administration of local affairs and appointing local officials with the consent of council.

The optional county plan is similar to that currently in effect in Monroe County. The officers are the same. They are all elected in municipal elections and commissioners serve a four year term. With these six choices available and given the flexibility they provide, any local municipality in Monroe County wishing to restructure its local government without getting involved in writing a constitution, will be able to do so.

The important first step, however, will be for the voters to establish local government study commissions to see what plans — if any — will be workable for their municipalities.

McCluskey steals thunder from Petty mark

By CHUCK FIERSON
Record Sports Editor

LONG POND — When Richard Petty broke the one-lap Pocono International Raceway record Thursday afternoon, he was only the third driver entered in the Pennsylvania 500 to attempt qualifications.

Petty, the all-time NASCAR Grand National money winner with $1,312,440, went out and ran 147.292 miles per hour in his 1972 Plymouth. The run bettered 1971 Pennsylvania 500 champion Butch Hartman's single lap mark of 146.123 mph. Petty's second lap of 146.941 also bettered the record.

Somebody asked him why he went out so early for his qualification attempt.

"All the boys were waiting to see what I was going to do," he explained. "So I just went out and did it."

Roger McCluskey waited three hours, knowing what he had to do to grab the pole for Sunday's 1 p.m. race. Then he went out and did it.

McCluskey, who leads the USAC drivers in winnings this year with $13,411 shattered Petty's fresh record in his 1970 Plymouth on the first lap with a 148.177 mph. Oddly enough, the car was formerly owned by Petty.

But McCluskey's faster speed will stand up as the one to beat when qualifications conclude today. Runs are scheduled from 8 a.m. until 3 p.m.

Unlike the Schaefer 500, in which McCluskey will start on the outside of the third row, where drivers take four laps during qualifications and average their speed for position, the better of two laps is the qualification standard on the USAC late model stock car circuit.

Although McCluskey, who qualified seventh and finished 19th after leading the race for a while in last year's race, turned in the fastest qualification Thursday, he'll have to wait until today to officially be awarded the pole.

Normally a driver has to qualify the first day in order to have a shot at the pole. But in this year's Pennsylvania 500 even second day attempts will have an opportunity to start on the inside of the first row and lead the pack of 20 rows of two cars.

USAC and raceway officials decided to extend the shot at the pole over two days because of the Yankee 250 at Indianapolis Raceway Park last Sunday. They said because of the race some stock car drivers would not arrive at the track until late Thursday. Because of the travel distance involved, the logistics and the limited practice time, it was decided to allow all the drivers have an equal chance at the pole.

Only 26 cars had been registered by the time the track closed Thursday night.

Nine drivers qualified Thursday and one of those doesn't count yet. Bill Shirey, Sumter, S.C., qualified his 1970 Plymouth at 137.444. But USAC officials said his run won't count until he pays the necessary fees.

Still left to qualify are such USAC hot shots as Hartman, Jack Bowsher, Dave Whitecomb and Lem Blankenship.

Al Unser, who will sit on the inside of the second row for the Schaefer 500, turned in the third best qualification time the first day. Unser, driving a 1971 Ford Torino, qualified at 145.154 miles per hour. His second lap was 144.517.

Gary Bettenhausen, who held the pole for the Schaefer 500 for a short time Tuesday and ended up in the middle of the second row, had the fourth best time when he qualified his 1972 Dodge at 143.414. His slower time was 143.296.

Tentatively on the inside of the third row is Cecil Gordon, whose 1971 Mercury qualified at 143.147. His slower lap on the two-and-one-half mile course was 142.909.

Sixth best of the day was Dave Marcis, Skyland, N.C. Marcis pushed his 1972 Matador to 142.200, slower than his second lap of 141.794.

Jim Tobin, Bloomington, Ill., had the seventh best qualification time when his 1970 Dodge Charger ran 136.328. His second lap was 134.966.

Rounding out Thursday's qualifiers was Harold Fair, Detroit, who had a 132.698 in his 1971 Ford Torino. His first lap was 131.909.

Field waits on Petty so he sets standard

By MAUREEN RUFFE

LONG POND — "I figured everybody was gonna wait on me," said NASCAR champion Richard Petty, describing his reasons for deciding to qualify for the Pennsylvania 500 Thursday afternoon after only 27 laps of practice.

"I knew the boys were all waiting to see what I could do, so I went out and did it," he said.

In his first attempt at qualification at the Pocono oval, Petty chalked up two record breaking runs and took command of the charge to the pole for Sunday's 500-mile race.

He clocked the first lap at 147.292 miles per hour. The second lap was a little slower at 146.941. But both times surpassed Butch Hartman's 1971 mark of 146.123 miles per hour.

Presently, Petty and his 1972 STP Plymouth have the number two spot for the race. He held the pole position for three hours until Roger McCluskey ran the Long Pond track at 148.177 miles per hour.

"I figure I've got 500 miles of the race to learn with," he said. "If I'm in the wrong place on the race track, I'll learn right quick from the Indy boys."

He added that the Schaefer 500 winners who are also participating in Sunday's race would have a marked advantage because they would have much more time on the track.

"I've never run on a track like this," said the 35-year-old speedster, who along with his father and David Pearson was three-time national NASCAR champion. "This is a whole new ball game."

"This is a challenging track," he added. With the three different corners you really need three different setups. But you have to pick a compromise all the way around."

Commenting that the track was "real nice" and the country beautiful, Petty said he and his team came to Pocono expecting more of a banked race track.

"We wound up with a setup like Ontario," he explained. "The corners are real slow. It's harder to get through than one but a mistake in turn three really costs you."

Last year all the Pennsylvania 500 drivers seemed to experience tire difficulty at the tri-oval, but Petty predicted that since the track has been resurfaced, tires shouldn't be a main concern.

"We have some long straightaways here," he said. "So the tires should have time to cool."

When asked how he felt about A.J. Foyt and Bobby Allison being out of the competition, Petty, who has amassed 143 wins and more than a million dollars in prize money said he liked everybody to be there when he won.

Schaefer drivers in final tuneup

LONG POND — With the fastest field ever for the Schaefer 500 ready to take the green flag at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, the 33 successful qualifiers concentrated their efforts Thursday to final practice runs, carburation tests and work in the garage area.

Only five of the drivers in the field did not take to the Pocono International Raceway for the final practice laps during the morning.

Included among the no-shows were Sam Posey, who will start in the 14th spot Saturday, Salt Walther, who will begin in the 12th slot, Bob Harkey, the 23rd fastest qualifier, Jerry Karl, who will be right behind Harkey, and 33rd qualifier Greg Weld.

But probably the most frustrated driver among those who did get out was pole sitter Bobby Unser. After turning a few laps in his "Screaming Eagle," the man who has sat on the pole the last eight championship races blew his engine.

One change affecting the drivers will occur Saturday. Dick King, chief steward of the United States Auto Club, announced that each car will be allotted 50 extra gallons of fuel for the race.

Mets dump Bucs

PITTSBURGH (UPI)—Wayne Garrett's sacrifice fly broke up a scoreless tie in the 10th inning Thursday night and gave the New York Mets a 1-0 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates in a first game of a two-night doubleheader as Jon Matlack tossed a four-hitter.

Matlack, who has given up only one earned run in his last four games, raised his record to 10-5 while Nelson Briles suffered his fourth loss.

Jenkins one-hits Phils but Cubs drop nightcap

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—After Ferguson Jenkins highlighted the debut of Chicago Cubs' manager Whitey Lockman by pitching a one-hitter for a 4-0 victory, the Philadelphia Phillies came back to win the second game 3-2 Thursday night on John Bateman's run-scoring single in the ninth inning.

The Phils were blanked for 16 innings by Jenkins and second game starter Bart Hooten but they rallied for two runs in the eighth and a run in the ninth to pull out the nightcap.

The Cubs scored single runs in the seventh and eighth on Ron Santo's third double of the night and a wild pitch to take a 2-0 lead.

Chicago relief ace Jack Aker took the loss after Hooten was taken out for a pinch-hitter in the eighth. Aker gave up all three Phils' runs.

Yankee home runs dump Red Sox, 6-2

NEW YORK (UPI)—Bobby Murcer drove in three runs with a sacrifice fly in the fifth inning and a two-run homer in the seventh inning Thursday night to lift the New York Yankees to a 6-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Thurman Munson doubled with one out in the seventh and Murcer unloaded his 15th homer of the year.

Fritz Peterson led off the fifth inning with a single,

Horace Clarke hit an infield single and an errant pickoff attempt by catcher Carlton Fisk advanced the runners to second and third. Thurman Munson followed with a bloop single to centerfield to score one run and sent Clarke to third base. Murcer followed with a sacrifice fly to centerfield to score the deciding run and boost the Yanks lead to 3-2.

Yankee reliever Chuck Seibach, who took over for Tiger starter Mickey Lolich in the eighth, picked up his seventh win against four defeats.

Aaron-Coody lead team tourney

LIGNIER, Pa. (UPI)—Tommy Aaron and Charles Coody, two of the quiet men of the PGA tour, shot a nine-under-par 62 on their better ball Thursday to take a one-stroke first round lead in the $200,000 National Team Championship.

Bert Yancey and Tom Weiskopf were in second place with a 63 that included an amazing 10 birdies, while two teams of longshots, Steve Oppermann—Chuck Rotar and Hubert Green—Mac McLendon, scored 64 and 65, respectively.

Arnold Palmer and Jack Lewis, the young, last-minute replacement for Jack Nicklaus, were another stroke behind in a group of 10 teams at 66 but many of the favored teams had problems on a Laurel Valley Golf Club course made long and soggy by overnight rains.

Bruce Crampton and Orville Moody, challengers to the Palmer-Nicklaus domination of this tournament the past two years, faded to a 70. Lee Trevino and Ray Floyd were at even-par 71 and Billy Casper and Jerry Heard shot a 72.

With scoring on a better-ball basis—only the lower of a team's scores on each hole counts toward its total—scores around par are not good ones and all three of those teams were in danger of missing the 36-hole cut.

Aaron, a perennial tournament runner-up who already has three second place finishes in 1972, and Coody, the 1971 Masters champion, built their lead around nine birdies and nine pars—with five of the birdies coming in succession on the front nine—but they credited one shot on the back nine with putting them on top.

After both drove into the rough at the 397-yard, par-4, 13th hole, and missed the green with their second shot, Coody sank a chip shot from 100 feet for a birdie. They followed that with birdies at 14, 15 and 18.

"We turned a five into a three at 13," Coody said.

"That was the shot that got us going," added Aaron, pointing out it came right after they had missed good chances for birdies at the 11th and 12th holes.

Coody and Aaron each had four conventional birdies, too, the tournament a third straight time if they start putting better.

"Generally, it was a pretty good round," Palmer said. "We had a lot of opportunities that we didn't capitalize on."

The other teams at 66 included a pair of family pairings, brothers Dave and Mike Hill and uncle Sam and nephew J. C. Snead. The only other prominent team in the group was Lanny Wadkins-Gibby Gilbert.

George Archer and Bobby Nichols, Bob Lunn and Dave Stokton, Gary Player and Bob Rosburg and Miller Barber and Don January were among those at 67.

The field will be trimmed to the low 36 teams and ties following today's second round for the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday, which will be nationally televised (ABC).

Nicklaus 'hopeful' for PGA

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI)—Jack Nicklaus was released this morning from University Hospital after undergoing surgery for an infected right index finger and said he is still hopeful he will be able to defend his PGA title next week.

He said, however, that only quick action on the finger saved his chances for playing in the tournament, which begins Aug. 3 at Oakland Hills Country Club, Birmingham, Mich.

"The doctors told me that if I hadn't undergone the operation I would have been out for at least two weeks," Nicklaus said. "They said I had developed a strep infection in the finger and had to have it operated on, including the draining of the fluid."

Merger faces fight from congressmen

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Chairman Emanuel Celler of the House Judiciary Committee told spokesmen for the National and American Basketball Associations Thursday they were asking Congress to "buy a pig in the poke" with their proposal to merge.

Celler made the charge as his anti-trust subcommittee opened hearings on the general question of "giant sports trusts" and in particular on the Supreme Court's decision in the Curt Flood case June 19 to let baseball remain free of anti-trust laws.

Celler recalled the high court's observation that any change in the exclusive monopoly exemption given baseball but not football or basketball was up to Congress. There are several bills before Celler's committee to remove baseball's exemption and the New York Democrat, author of one of them, said he hoped that Congress would finally act to settle the issue.

Celler lumped bills to merge the ABA and NBA to permit, with the baseball measures and took testimony in the first day of expected prolonged hearings from league spokesmen as well as from Lawrence Fleisher, counsel for the NBA Players Association, which opposes the merger bill.

Former Sen. Thomas H.

Kuchel, R-Calif., representing both leagues and flanked by Walter Kennedy and Jack Dolph, NBA and ABA commissioners respectively, and by Wendell Cherry, part owner of the Kentucky Colonels of the ABA, repeated testimony they gave earlier before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee.

"It's just a simple merger bill that is of the greatest urgency if professional basketball is to survive," said Kuchel, who said it permitted a limited option clause affecting only rookies and then binding them for only one year.

"It permits every conceivable violation of the anti-trust law," said Celler. "We're being asked to buy a pig in the poke. We don't know what the agreements referred to here will involve."

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Tex., ranking Democrat behind Celler on the subcommittee and author, along with 44 other House members of the merger bill, told Celler that the "arrangements" allowed in the bill "are exempt from anti-trust laws only as they are incidental to the merger. This is not a broad anti-trust exemption."

"Would you accept a bill that permitted just the merger without provision for a common draft or a reserve system?" asked Celler.

"If you destroyed the draft, what then would the committee propose as to how players would be distributed between rich and poor clubs, winning and losing clubs?" asked Kuchel.

Kennedy, Dolph and Cherry all submitted prepared statements without reading them but in which they claimed mounting financial losses resulting mainly from a bidding war for players.

"The two leagues are destroying each other by the competition for graduating college players," said Kennedy.

Dolph said the ABA, since its formation in 1967, has lost $20 million and that every ABA team has operated at a loss.

GARY PLAYER'S GOLF CLASS:

Putting the brakes on

Bruins' Cheevers jumps to Cleveland of WHA

CLEVELAND (UPI)—Goalie Gerry Cheevers, who has played for the Stanley Cup champion Boston Bruins for the past five years, today signed with the Cleveland Crusaders of the World Hockey Association.

Terms of the agreement were not released.

"This is a banner day for Cleveland and the Crusaders," said Nick J. Mileti, owner of the newly-formed club.

"Gerry Cheevers is, in my opinion, the top goaltender in all of hockey."

"He is a winner and we are proud and honored he is now going to play in Cleveland," Mileti said.

One unconfirmed report said Cheevers had received $1 million on a six-year contract.

"This is the big step we needed and wanted to take in forming a major league franchise. Goaltending is the key position in hockey and we are thrilled that the Crusaders will have the very best in that position," Mileti said.

Cheevers, 31, who was instrumental in Boston's drive to the National Hockey League title last season, is a native of St. Catherine's, Ont. He has been in professional hockey 11 years and was named the outstanding goalie in the American and Central leagues while with Rochester and Oklahoma City respectively.

"I am excited about coming to Cleveland and joining the Crusaders," Cheevers said at a news conference here.

"I am impressed with Mr. Mileti's organization and have confidence we will have a winning club here," Cheevers said.

Cheevers, drafted by the Bruins eight years ago from Toronto, set a NHL record this season for goaltenders with the longest unbeaten streak ever recorded, 32 games in a row which included 24 wins and eight ties.

The goalie, whose hobby is race horses, didn't find a regular spot on the Bruins roster until 1967-68. When the Bruins won the Stanley Cup in 1970, Cheevers set another record with 10 straight playoff victories.

Cheevers during the regular season generally had been alternated with his partner, Ed Johnston.

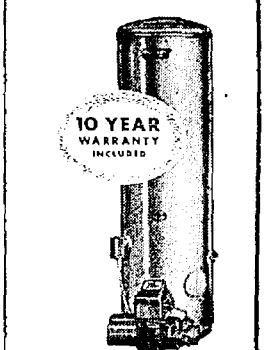

During five seasons in Boston, Cheevers played in 252 regular season games with a goals against of 2.86. In 40 playoff games he allowed an average of 2.51 scores.

Earlier this summer he was named to play for Team Canada, the club which will face the Russians in September. This places him in the same position as Bobby Hull since NHL head Clarence Campbell has ruled that only players with signed NHL contracts can play on the team.

Herb Ralby, Bruins publicity director, said "we have no comment."

Design 7231: The exterior of this house is friendly and natural. Textured boards and brick look easily at home in a suburban setting.

Home has 1,630 square feet, is 64 feet wide by 48 feet deep.

Rancher planned for comfort

By JOHN D. BLOODGOOD
Comfort and convenience are planned into this easy-going ranch home.

The living room is designed to be lived in. A fireplace and sliding doors that open on the deck add to your enjoyment.

The family room, open to the kitchen over the sink island, is a smaller sitting area and a breakfast room for casual family use.

From the kitchen, you have easy access to the garage and to the patio.

The master dressing area has space for a large chest right where it would be most convenient.

In each of the two family bedrooms, there are eels that are just right for desks or a row of chests.

Note the really large bedroom closets — a total of almost 27 feet in the three bedrooms.

Easy to install, too

Glass blocks vandalism answer

First floor or basement windows pose a major problem for today's city dwellers. They often require and inordinate amount of cleaning and maintenance or are frequently broken by children or vandals.

Seemingly, the only solution to plight of the urban homeowners is to replace pane-glass windows with a material that lets in lights, yet requires only infrequent cleaning and is virtually impossible to break.

That may sound like a tall order, — but such a material does exist. It's called glass block.

In some large cities, there are firms that manufacture ready-made panels of glass block. These panels can be installed either by the homeowner, a glass block prefabricator or a mason contractor.

Names of prefabricators and contractors appear in the telephone directory yellow pages.

Should you wish to install your own panels, the technique is quite simple. The procedure varies slightly depending on whether the panel is to be installed in a frame or brick home.

For a brick home, remove the old window and window frame from the wall, and carefully measure the opening. It may be necessary to adjust the window opening to the proper size by cutting or using an extra-heavy mortar joint.

Finishing materials choice wide

Plaster and plaster board are still the most widely used interior finishing materials, but the list of attractive and serviceable materials is growing by leaps and bounds.

It includes metal and hardboard panels, prefabricated hardwood plywood, cement board, stained lumber, plastic and glass fibre panels, ornamental tiles, marble, glass and masonry.

In addition, there are the new supported and unsupported vinyl coverings for unfinished walls. In choosing wall and ceiling materials you have the factors of cost, appearance, maintenance and acoustical properties to consider.

Always make sure the inside frame dimensions of the window opening are three-eighths inches or one-half inch greater in both height and width than the space required for the panel. Your panel supplier will give you proper dimensions.

Also remember to allow for one-fourth inch mortar joints when measuring.

Place the prefabricated panel into the opening. Center it in the opening with wood wedges at sides and bottom if necessary.

Mortar mix should be stiff enough so it will not slump on the mortar board. A mix of one part Portland Cement, one part pressure hydrated lime and four parts clean sand should do the job properly.

Push mortar into openings at sides, top and bottom around the panel, working from both inside and outside. The wooden wedges can be removed when the mortar begins to set.

Clean off excess mortar from the block and finish all mortar joints to give a clean, even appearance.

If the glass block window is to be installed in a frame home, follow this procedure:

Remove the old window and window frame from the wall. Carefully measure the opening in which the pre-fabricated glass block panel will fit, adjusting the window opening to the proper size if necessary with one inch by four inches or two inches by four inches lumber. If the opening is too small cut it to larger size.

As in a brick home, the inside frame dimensions or window opening should be three eighths or one-half inch greater in both height and width than the space required for the panel. Here too, allow one-fourth inch mortar joints between blocks when measuring.

Home owners can install chore-free glass block panels, which are virtually impossible to break, need little cleaning.

Fasten a wood or metal stop around the outside of the window frame and position the panel in the opening. Fasten the stop around the inside of the panel.

Caulk the panel at sides, top and bottom to insure complete weather tightness.

Hardboard lasts, crib to college

That innocent little child sleeping so peacefully in his youth bed is going to get up in a few hours and start wearing things out — his toys, the floors, rugs, walls, and you. So you'd better be prepared.

You might start in the nursery. Get rid of the fluffy ruffly things that children start to demolish as soon as they can walk. Keep in mind that children's rooms can be rough and tough and also attractive.

Wall coverings should be equally child-proof. Prefinished hardboard is a fine choice, and easy for the do-it-yourselfer to apply. It's washable and dent resistant — children can draw on it with crayons, bump it with toys and stick pictures to it without marring the surface.

Applying prefinished hardboard over old walls provides — in one step — a durable, scratch and dent resistant finish. It's already decorated when it comes from the factory.

Hardboard panels come in a great variety of finishes ranging from natural looking woodgrain effects to colorful printed patterns. There are solid colors, stripes, Colonial prints, contemporary flower patterns, simulated tiles, travertine and other marble-like effects.

Home handyman like prefinished hardboard because it comes in large panels that are easy to cut, shape and install with ordinary carpenter's tools. It doesn't crack, check or split when cut and nailed, and it can be bent around curved surfaces.

For unlimited storage space, line a closet and cover one section of the bedroom wall with perforated hardboard. With an assortment of hooks and hangers, you can put up shelves for books 'n things.

The continuous clean oven, so beloved in the kitchen stove has come to the counter-top combination unit that roasts, broils, bakes and toasts in "LoVen." Available in several models, all feature interiors that stay continuously clean while in use, thanks to a catalytic coating. (Dominion-Scovill, 99 Mill St., Waterbury, Conn. 06720)

Home improvement

A playhouse can be fun for your children and their friends. This one is a tower design with different levels connected by ramps. The highest level has a four-foot square roof to provide shade. Around this square center section, the two-foot balcony ramp projections lead down to the ground. There is a covered area, too, below the upper level for a doll's house or a fort. The structure is four by four-inch posts set into the ground to a minimum depth of two feet. Exterior grade plywood forms the side walls and floor areas. Asphalt shingles roof the top.

Build own library bookshelves easily

Building your own library shelves is really easy. First you begin with selecting a bare wall in the house.

Then you have to procure the materials. One of the most popular do-it-yourself libraries begins with press boards, cinder blocks and colored burlap.

The press boards can be cut into any desired length, usually eight feet by one foot by one inch. This allows for the weight of the books, and is a standard size. The boards are then covered with the colored burlap.

The cinder blocks are painted a flat black.

The blocks are then arranged three to the eight feet board, alternating the cinders, length-wise and then width-wise for each level.

Regular bookshelf supports are then anchored to the wall and the top two boards for added support.

Hard bargaining results in new gift shop

Penelope Julstedt shows off huge brass samovar in front of her unique gift shop 'Bizarre', which features Moroccan goods and curios, some brought back from that country by Miss Julstedt and her mother, others imported from that nation. (Staff photo by Bill Zellers)

BUSHKILL — A trip to Morocco and some hard bargaining with the natives has resulted in a new gift shop for the Poconos appropriately named "Bizarre."

It is full of items picked up by Miss Penelope Julstedt when she visited the country with her mother last year on her spring vacation from teaching in an elementary school for children of Army parents stationed in Spain.

They both planned to go through North Africa, but Morocco was as far as they got since Miss Julstedt met a friend who took them on a personal tour of the country and introduced them to the natives.

"Most tourists have the mistaken notion that Morocco is dangerous," Miss Julstedt says. "Therefore, they go through the country in big groups with guides and get herded in and out of the country without finding out what it is really like."

"It is really safer there than anywhere else in the world because their whole economy is geared to tourism and they don't want any bad publicity," she explains.

"The tourists are spoiling the Moroccan children, though, because they would rather make money off the tourists than go to school". She admits that she was amazed by the intelligence of the children, some of whom could speak as many as five languages.

Tourists soon learn that there is hardly anything you can't bargain for in Morocco, Miss Julstedt said.

"Even if you both know what an object is worth you have to sit down with the seller and talk about it. If you are one of his special customers you will do this talking over a cup of mint tea," she added.

Leather goods Moroccan specialty

Penelope Julstedt putters around through shop filled with bizarre Mideastern items from the North African nation of Morocco, many of brass, others of wrought iron, glass, beads — you name it.

ornate, she explains, since the people wear their money in expensive objects rather than putting it in the bank.

She has a collection of Moroccan clothing which includes the Djellaba, a long robe with a hood, the Khaftan, a robe without the hood, and the Bernous, a cape with a hood.

The long robes the people wear are actually cooler than ordinary clothes because they are not bound close to the body and allow the air to circulate inside them, she notes. The robes can be worn around the house or as beach wear.

"The Moroccan woman wears robes which are slit at the side up to the knee showing a western influence, but still wear the traditional veil to keep themselves from being admired by men other than their husbands," she laughed.

The Moroccans make all sorts of leather goods which are hand tooled, inlaid with gold and painted over, she says. Some of the leather goods offered in the shop are leather hassocks, leather luggage, old leather military cartridge cases decorated with brass and leather book covers.

She also has some examples of the fine metal work the Moroccans do with copper and brass. Among these items are bowls, candle holders, metal insects, tea kettles, a tea service and a smaovar (used to make coffee).

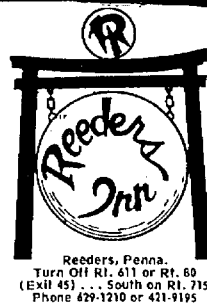

The Moroccans also work with wool and turn out objects that are cheaper than those made in America, she explains. This will change in a little while, though, because the tariff on these items is going to be raised, she adds.

The shop features hand loom blankets, prayer rugs and sheep skins (some of which are marked with a blue spot indicating that the sheep were a sacrificial offering of the Moslems).

"You have to come in the store with an open mind," she says, "since everything can be used for more than one purpose. For instance the hand loom blankets can be used for table covers, draperies or bed spreads."

Before they left Morocco they met Tahar Chaffai who runs the biggest bazaar in Morocco, the Bazaar Marakech Le Rouge. He now sends them a variety of Moroccan goods that includes "everything there is to sell in Morocco," according to Miss Julstedt.

Peters Valley sanctuary for hand crafts

Variety of hand-made goods, ranging from the handsome, natural wood cloverleaf table on which they stand, to pottery, metalware and turned artifacts bedeck the interior of the

PETERS VALLEY — Across the Delaware River from Dingman's Ferry and just off the Old Mine Road is the small crossroads hamlet of Peters Valley, which has become a sanctuary for old hand crafts that might otherwise have disappeared in this mechanized society.

The village is a joint effort of the National Park Service and the New Jersey State Council on the Arts.

Five craftsmen live there year-round, producing, demonstrating, teaching and selling their work. Two of the craftsmen are woodworkers, two are potters and one is a weaver.

The resident craftsmen are not required to teach, but they may do so if they want to, according to Mrs. Britt Puleo, a national park ranger in charge of visitor information.

The project was started in January of 1970 as a pilot project of the National Park Service to expand participation in handicrafts by having people study or learn them by visiting the facility and watching professionals at work.

For those who want to learn, the village offers a 10-week summer school featuring courses in wood design, weaving, ceramics, welded sculpture, crocheting, camel-ing, wood carving, photography, jewelry, spinning, tapestry, leather, blacksmithing, and stitchery.

The craft school offers three-week courses in each of the crafts and several levels of proficiency in some of the courses. Each class is limited to 10 students who receive five to six hours of instruction a day.

There are 150 students registered for the courses this summer, Mrs. Puleo said. "There are usually 35 to 40 students at the village on any week. The median age of the students is 36 because of the wide range in ages and the number of students in the middle-age group."

Twenty-five of the students are housed at the village while the rest either commute or camp nearby, Mrs. Puleo explained. There is a slide show and discussion for those students who stay overnight.

Twenty-six instructors at the school can take the students from the basic steps in a craft up to a high level of proficiency, Mrs. Puleo said. The students are only allowed to take one course at a time and may complete from three to four projects in their three-week instruction, she explained.

"All of the courses are taught from scratch," Mrs. Puleo said, "and the emphasis is on the student creating something rather than having something prepared for him to put together. Putting together a kit is like painting by number."

Besides the three-week courses, there are five-hour workshops held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on certain days. They cover macrame, wood block printing, dyeing with natural dyes and rya rug making.

The one-day workshops cost $10 and the three-week courses cost $50 a week ($35 a week more if the student is residing at the village.)

"There has been a fantastic resurgence of interest in handicrafts," Mrs. Puleo noted. "The courses are regularly filled, with ceramics being the first to get filled up. Also, people come from miles around to see the crafts and are appreciative of well made products."

Groups can come to the village and tour the craft workshops, Mrs. Puleo said, but if the groups contain more than 10 people it would be advisable to notify her. They should also report to the visitor center so she can brief them in advance on what they will see, she added.

"From 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. the visitors may see classes in session, but they are not to interfere with the instructors during the classes," she said. "I can't guarantee that the craftsmen will be on the job unless they are arranged for."

The village is also open from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday when visitors can talk to the craftsmen who will explain their crafts. There are picnic tables for those who might want to spend the day.

A craft store at the village displays the products of the craftsmen and their students. The students must submit their work to a jury of outside professional craftsmen who decide whether the students are qualified to sell their crafts through the store. So far 104 students from the school have qualified.

The store exhibits all sorts of items such as pottery, macrame items, hand carved woodwork and furniture.

Depression Glass new collectable!

BEATRICE G. ROSENBLUM

It sure doesn't look like a collectable, but it is! It's an example of Depression Glass, made during the 1930's as inexpensive tableware and it is now considered to be a popular collectable. The round plate, in the "Sharon" pattern, was made in pink, green, and crystal, 1935-1939. The square plate, in the "Adam" pattern, was made in pink and green, 1932-1934. (Photographs courtesy of Hazel Marie Weatherman Collection)

One of the few nice things that came out of the Depression is . . . Depression Glass.

Many people still own examples, yet they may be quite unaware of the fact that it is now of interest to collectors.

Perhaps you are at this very moment using a set of pale yellow sherbert-cups or an etched green glass cake-plate or a pink lemonade-pitcher your family has owned for years, without realizing that they are today formally described as "Depression Glass" or "The Glass of the Thirties" and that it has attained the status of a collectable.

Depression Glass was the tableware made during the 1930s and very early '40s. It was sold in chain stores like Sears, Roebuck and Company, Montgomery Ward, and F.W. Woolworth.

It came in many lovely colors: cobalt blue, ruby red, clear and amethyst, but the dominant and typical colors were pale green, coral pink, rose and various shades of yellow, ranging from pale gold to deep topaz.

The range of articles made was enormous. There were complete dinner sets, compotes, pitchers, salt and pepper sets, platters, cheese dishes, candlesticks, beverage and dessert sets, flower vases and even ice-buckets.

The glass itself was of excellent quality. It was made by many of the outstanding factories in the United States. (The advanced collector looks for the "factory marks" on the articles.)

The decorative techniques were very similar to those which had been used to make the now-costly 19th century pressed glass.

Designs, applied in relief on the outside of the dishes, created a stippled effect, rough to the touch. (That is one of the ways to recognize it.)

The designs were given impressive names, like Adam, Cubist, Madrid, Florentine, Windsor.

And the designation of colors was absolutely poetic: Flamingo, Springtime Green, Golden Glow and Madonna Blue!

Depression Glass, although lovely, was always inexpensive. It had to be, in order to sell during those lean years of the Great Depression.

And it certainly did sell!

Even today, years later.

Shawnee Gallery full circle for Pocono artist

SHAWNEE-ON-DELAWARE
— After starting out in the Poconos then going to New York and later to Mexico, Miss Elnora Hauser has come full-circle and is exhibiting her art in her Pocono home, now called The Shawnee Gallery.

She was born in Warren County, N.J., but her family moved to Shawnee when she was very young. "I was exposed to art at a very early age," she says, "since my mother made rugs and my father did cabinet work. At the time I was too close to them to notice the art work in what they were doing," she notes, "but they did have an effect on me."

"We were also close fiends of the Cullen Yates family," she says.

She began her art training after graduating from East Stroudsburg State College and enlisting for three years in the U.S. Navy.

She studied art at the Corcoran School of Art in Washington, D.C., Columbia University, the Brooklyn Museum Art School and Hunter College (all in New York) and won a scholarship to the Instituto Allende in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico where she got her Master of Fine Arts Degree.

She started exhibiting her work at various annual exhibitions at Wyckoff's and has exhibited in numerous galleries in New York, Vermont, Missouri, Mexico and in her home state of Pennsylvania.

Explaining her move from New York City back to the Poconos, she says, "I have loved the city for a long time, but I don't feel that way about it now and I would like to stay here."

Through the years Miss Hauser has gone through many styles of painting, from the abstract and cubist to the starkly representational. She admits that she goes on kicks when she will paint in one style for weeks or months.

"I always come back to studies of nature," she says, "and I don't think I ever divorce myself from reality."

She likes doing landscapes and portraits once in a while and says she would like to paint the slate quarries because they are very dramatic with the different colors of rock and seem primeval.

She explains that she likes abstract painting because it is more relaxing with no compulsion to achieve a likeness as in representational painting. "The work is more spontaneous and if I see some form in the picture I can elaborate on it."

In her wooden collages she likes to use the scraps of wood as they are cut by the jigsaw and put a limitation on herself. In her pictorial collages she likes to keep a file of pictures under many different themes in hopes that they might come in handy in a future picture.

"I never get very far away from any of my styles," she explains. The style that has influenced her most has been that of Chinese and Japanese ink-brush paintings, she adds. Also, her Mexican experience taught her to emphasize brilliant colors such as reds and oranges.

Miss Hauser believes an artist should be interested in many things and be able to do anything from making designs to producing jewelry. (She has created some silver necklaces and some enameled rings cut from a piece of copper water pipe.)

"Many artists get hung up on one or two things," she pointed out. She works in many media including pen and ink, water color, charcoal, pastels, oil paints, graphics, etching, engraving, lithography and woodcuts.

Most recently she has been working in acrylics and batik, melted wax colors painted on

Depression items now 'quaint'

there is scarcely a homemaker who does not still possess a few pieces which either she or her mother bought some 30 or 40 years ago.

However, it is only in recent years that the glass has aroused the interest of collectors.

Some of the enthusiasts are prompted by nostalgic remembrance of those days when the colorful dishes were their only "good set."

Many of the eager buyers, however, belong to that interesting new group, the "Youthful Collectors," who are in their late 'teens or early 20s.

Do you know why? Well, for those born long after the depression era, the 1930's belong to the dim, distant past. And the glass is thus endowed with a "quaint, antique charm!"

Recently a number of well-illustrated books have appeared, listing pattern names, colors, factory stamps and — most valued — current prices.

These books serve to further whet the appetite of collectors. (And further hoist prices.)

Now, please don't misunderstand us. A carton or two of Depression Glass is not going to enable you to tour Sunny Spain, or acquire a colored television set or any such luxuries.

But, if you really are using a set of pale yellow sherbert cups and a forty-year-old pink lemonade pitcher, please, please, at least handle them gently!

"I won't say anything is not an art form," she says. "I try to see the beauty in things that others might not see."

Miss Hauser still works during the year by teaching art for a special education class for emotionally disturbed and retarded children at the Rugby School for Retarded Children in Westchester, New York.

She will be at the gallery during the summer and show her art work to interested people from Thursday through Sunday by appointment. She wants to keep three days a week free for creative work.

To get to the gallery turn left on the road to Shawnee Lake in the village of Shawnee and it will be the first house on the left. For an appointment call 421-3999.

Always watch where you sit

While out on the water, many people throw caution to the wind and are careless about where they sit. Don't permit anyone to ride on the gunwales, transom, bow, or seatbacks. These are especially dangerous because they are not made for such use.

OLD MINE ROAD — Forty students from 22 different universities and in various majors have found an interesting way to spend their summer vacations — digging for the relics the Lenni Lenape Indians who once lived along the Delaware.

They are camped out along the New Jersey side of the river for a six-week, six-credit course in archaeology taught by professor Herbert Kraft of Seton Hall. The site is on land owned by the National Park Service, which gave permission for the dig.

Since professor Kraft was not around when this reporter dropped in, his son John explained the methods the budding archaeologists are using and what they are looking for.

"In order to figure out where to dig," he explained, "you must put yourself in the place of an Indian and decide where the best place would be for him to camp. This site is by the river and on a high knoll to guard against flooding. It has a stream nearby to provide fresh water and was also mentioned as a good site by arrowhead collectors.

"Before we pick a site we dig a test trench to see if we can find any artifacts. If we do and decide to keep on digging we map out the area in ten-foot squares so all the artifacts can be numbered and catalogued according to their position in the squares. This enables us to tell where an object came from by noting the number on it.

"We then take off the top layer of soil, which has been turned over by the plow, and get down to the lighter-colored undisturbed layer of soil. When we reach this layer we remove the soil in three-inch layers to separate the different ages of the artifacts. All the soil is put through sifters to pick out any small artifacts."

The only complaint Kraft had about the soil was that it was too acid and did not preserve bone very well. However, shell or charcoal near the bones helped to preserve them, he noted.

Once the traces of an artifact are seen the digging becomes very slow. Kraft said, and it may take three or four days to take out the soil from around one artifact because "we only have one chance at it."

After the artifacts are dug out, they are put on a pedestal and photographed.

The dig has uncovered what looks like an Indian village. The students have come upon some garbage pits and a grave, but so far have not found a post mold — a small round black stain which would show where the post of a dwelling was at one time.

The garbage pits appear as large round black stains in the earth. Most of the objects that have been found so far have been found in the pits.

The diggers have found the bones of bear, deer, elk, turtles, fish and rodents in one pit. These bones are sent out to be analyzed and to have their age determined. Shells and pottery have also been found in the pits.

"The grave they have found holds the traces of a skeleton in a flexed position. The shallow burial could mean that the person died in the winter and, since the ground was too hard for digging, some dirt was piled over him or he was thrown into a garbage pit, according to Kraft.

Other objects which have been unearthed include points for such things as knives, spears and arrows and net sinkers. The objects are a mixture of artifacts from the Archaic period and the late Woodland period.

"We expect to have a lot more artifacts in the next weeks", Kraft stated. Meanwhile the students are working from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Kraft said.

'Kiss Me Kate' in final Camelback week

TANNERSVILLE — "Kiss Me Kate," entering its final week at the Camelback Summer

Playhouse, Tannersville, is considered by many to be Cole Porter's finest gift to the Broadway theatre.

Certainly his music has been rarely duplicated. "So In Love", "Wonderbar", "Another Opening", "Too Damn Hot", "Always True to You Darling in My Fashion" and so many more testify to the genius of the late great composer.

The professional resident cast at Camelback acts out the interplay of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" and a mirth-filled contemporary script with much gusto and brilliance, a true indication of their Broadway and nationally acknowledged backgrounds.

For Harrison Somers, the part of Petruchio and Fred, created by Alfred Drake on Broadway, is just a natural continuation of a much acclaimed career, which has seen him star with Edie Adams in "Lil Abner," Lilo in "Damn Yankees" and Eileen Brennan in "Rosenmary".

His principal roles in "Boys From Syracuse," "Once Upon a Mattress" and "The Jacques Brel Revue" have taken him on coast-to-coast tours, while he is the proud author of the libretto for the opera, "Pantomime".

His co-star, Sharon Stuart, who portrays "Kate" is the possessor of a splendid voice which has been heard in such varied spots as New York's Town Hall, Las Vegas and the Plaza Hotel.

She was a member of the Howard Keel company of "Carousel", the Las Vegas production of "Fiddler on the Roof" and has starred in "West Side Story", "Good News" and "Oklahoma".

"Kiss Me Kate", which runs through Aug. 5 will be followed by "You're A Good Man Charlie Brown", Aug. 7-19.

Performances are nightly (except Sundays) at 8:30 with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays at 2:30.

28th Annual Pocono Mt. Antique Show scheduled

EAST STROUDSBURG — The 28th annual Pocono Mountains Antique Show will be held Aug. 9, 10 and 11 in the gymnasium at East Stroudsburg High School, it has been announced.

A show that offers natives and vacationers in the Poconos alike an opportunity to wander through the world of yesteryear, the show benefits the General Hospital of Monroe County and is presented by the hospital Women's Auxiliary.

Considered by many to be one of the finest antique shows in the East, it will offer an opportunity for 40 dealers to present period and country furniture, a fascinating array of copper, brass, silver and one-of-a-kind antiques.

Show hours are from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Aug. 9-10 and 12 noon to 10 p.m. Aug. 11. Lunches and suppers will be served in the pario of the high school and two parking areas will provide ample parking for the event.

Dealers in the Pocono area participating in the event include Vans Antiques, P.O. Box 55, Delaware, N.J.; Frank O. Smith, 181 Washington St., East Stroudsburg; Janet Price, Price's Antiques, Mt.

Bethel; Bousbell's Curiosity Shop, Park Avenue, Stroudsburg; Schneider's Antiques, Rte. 390 between Mountainhome and Canadensis; Dorothy Rosbach, Dingman's Ferry and The Churn Antiques at the Little Shop, 192 Spring St., Newton, N.J.
